HOUSE OF MIRTH

All the Whos From Whoville...

You would've thought it was the golden ticket to Willy Wonka's factory, the way everyone and their mother, sister, brother and distant relatives jockeyed for an invitation to the opening of the new House of Blues.

Of course, part of the mystique (not to mention confusion) stemmed from the fact that the celebration began on Thursday, when the J. Geils Band reunited to rock the house for assorted industry insiders and West Coast types, followed by a concert Friday by the Gipsy Kings, attended by a whole slew of other bigwigs, and finally the "official" grand opening on Saturday night, when the bill included the Reverend Lee Gospel Group, followed by guitar hero Ronnie Earl and then The Blues Brothers, aka the club's co-owner Dan Aykroyd and Jim Belushi.

Jasper White and Susan Callender at the opening of the House of Blues

Marci Duarte and Gina Fox at the House of Blues opening party

Elan Sassoon at the House of Blues

Elizabeth and Peter Georgantas at the House of Blues

In short, no one could figure out which was the most "I" of all the VIP parties, but no matter. By all accounts, all three were a good time, although I can only report first-hand on the bedlam of Saturday night, when half the fun was cutting the line that snaked all the way down Lansdowne Street. Back in my clubbing days, my motto was "It's all downhill once you get past the velvet ropes." (Either that, or "Snorting coke off the back of a toilet isn't unsanitary," but that's another story.)

In any case, the mayhem inside proved more entertaining than expected, with just about Everyone Who's Anyone very publicly proclaiming their Somebody-ness.

Spotted, in no particular order, were blues legend James Montgomery, filmmaker Laura Bernieri, Inside Track gossipeuses Laura Raposa and Gayle Fee, Vineyard chatelaine (and widow of John) Judy Belushi Pisano, all three of the Lyons brothers (whom I haven't seen together for years), radio diva Bev Tilden, the ever affable Jasper White, hair-care mogul Elan Sassoon, über-groover Mary Menna, the eternally tanned George Regan, threads peddler Alan Bilzerian, aptly named fashion model Gina Fox and so on.

The place to be was the super-groovy Foundation Room, which one guest described as "a Bedouin sheikh's desert tent on steroids," although mixing and mingling with the hoi polloi on the main dance floor proved equally entertaining.

So now Boston has a House of Blues again, and anyone who wasn't invited to one of the opening parties has to make up a story about being sick or out of town. As one guest put it, "It looks like they invited the phone book."

Auf Off!

It's unclear whether it's a compliment or an insult to be compared to Tim Gunn, but it was certainly an honor to emcee and judge Project Mozart—a fashion competition sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in which young local designers created dresses based on the composer's music.

For a week, audience members at Symphony Hall voted on their favorite dresses, and then came the moment of truth.

Yours truly joined fellow judges—BSO violinist Wendy Putnam, fashion designers Denise Hajjar and Nirva and modeling agent Tonn—in Higginson Hall to view a runway presentation and anoint the winner. That turned out to be audience favorite Lowander Lee, whose kicky little cocktail dress had a skirt made up of hand-cut purple petals made from the score of Mozart's Symphony No. 40.

Congratulations to her, and to the pushy Teutonic broad who came up to me afterward to argue about our decision. Here's a kiss on each cheek and a hearty auf Wiedersehen. ✖✖✖

Perfection has its price.

Of course it tastes better than other beers. We've had over 600 years to get the recipe right. Our esteemed brewery has been producing beer in Leuven since 1366. Which means we've been around a bit longer than most. Mind you, over the years our beer has witnessed the odd change or two. For instance, our customers no longer drink it to ward off the Plague, as they used to in medieval times. However, one thing has stayed the same after all these years. Stella Artois is still painstakingly brewed in a time-honored tradition with the choicest ingredients. Which is why our customers have kept coming back for more, even after 600 years.

Always enjoy responsibly. stellaartois.com

OMISSION
The Boston Underground Film Festival's award statue in the March 18 issue was designed and sculpted by Casey A. Riley.

Those Salmon Have It Right

In my Havana days, I spent many a languid afternoon on the veranda of the Hotel Florida, lazing in the buzz of a gin and tonic while a tragically beautiful Russian countess flicked away the flies with her riding crop. Sweating in my linen pants, I would scribble mot justes in my journal, trying—but never quite succeeding—in capturing the rancid brilliance of the old town streets, the azure in the dawn above the coral sands of Santa Maria.

Then I woke up and realized I was on the Orange Line between Mass. Ave. and Ruggles. And another small piece of my soul died.

Even a salmon knows that travel is what makes life worth living. But it's easy to be cynical. The last time I went abroad, I spent a fortune on cab fare, got lost in a post-industrial wasteland, bickered with a half-dozen functionaries who didn't speak English and contracted gastroenteritis. Then I finally left Logan.

That doesn't mean it's not worth the effort. After all, you can't walk the heights of Mount Parnassus unless you first brave the luggage carousel at Athens' airport. You can't get to Margaritaville without losing a little salt. (And dignity. There's nothing liberating about wearing a coconut bra.)

RECE[illegible] Clark Showalter was manning the front desk at the Copley Square Hotel while a reality TV show was filming in the building's lounge. The premise revolved around a couple who were finally getting married after years of dating.

"They couldn't tie the knot, basically," he recalls. "The show was trying to bring them together and just get it done." Suddenly a woman burst into the hotel lobby. "The bride ran through, threw off her microphone on the ground and screamed 'I'm not getting married!' and ran down the street. The camera crew came running through and chased her."

Showalter doesn't encounter screaming singles everyday. But the episode is representative of the drama that crosses his path as an "intuition expert," the job title the Copley uses for its concierges.

For the past six months, Showalter, 29, has steered tourists around Boston. In that time, he's observed that a visitor's origin often determines his or her agenda. Americans, for example, almost always visit the same place first. "They want to see Harvard, especially somebody from the Midwest." Europeans make a beeline for Newbury Street. "With the exchange rate with the euro and pound, it's probably the No. 1 request."

The trick to Showalter's job, of course, is serving hundreds of guests while giving each one personal treatment. He balances those responsibilities by sending visitors to neighborhoods he frequents, like the South End. "That's one of the spots in the city I really like," he reflects. "It doesn't quite get the touristy crowd."

Drink of the Moment

Nice Ride

On paper, the Mustang Sherry looks like a mishmash Victor Frankenstein might've assembled: an aperitif, two digestifs, sherry, rye and juice. It sounds like a failed idea tragically brought to life, or one of those cocktails born from barman hubris fated to fade out on the menu.

In fact, Persephone's Mustang Sherry ($12) is composed of three distinct parts. The first is a touchstone cocktail: in this case, the mix of whiskey, fortified wine and bitters known as the Manhattan. "Everything really revolves around the Manhattan," says bartender Jeff "Chewy" Chouinard, who was inspired by the Brooklyn Haze served at UpStairs on the Square.

The second part is intuition. "I'd been meaning to put sherry and bourbon together for a while," explains bar manager Chris Graeff, who'd been looking to salvage the wine's standing. "Sherry has a bad reputation either as a cooking wine or an octogenarian drink." When Graeff tasted an Oloroso sherry called Sangre y Trabajadero, he knew he had found the right accompaniment. "There's a dryness to it, and it's not gloppy and sweet."

The third component is a nod to what's hot. A lace of Fernet, the bitter spirit now the shot du jour of industry folk, lends an herbal note to a drink already balancing nuttiness, sweetness and acidity. The result is a cocktail far more approachable than preconceptions would allow, a monster that just needs a chance to be understood. NICK ALTSCHULLER

Good Eats

Tastes Like...

Before Todd English opened his umpteenth restaurant, sold his GreenPan cookware on the Home Shopping Network and became a regular fixture on Public Television, he was boldly peddling chicken roasted in a cavelike brick oven from his flagship Charlestown kitchen. That was 20 years ago, and to celebrate, English is paying homage to a few signature items from the original menu—at the original menu prices. The aforementioned chicken is a semi-boneless breast, thigh and leg roasted with garlic jus, a seared smashed potato cake and green beans. Its crisp, well-rendered skin is perfectly seasoned, and the garlicky liquid keeps the meat meltingly tender. The recession-friendly items will rotate on Olive's Friday-night menu through the end of April. ELIZABETH BOMZE

ASK THE EXPERT

Q: "WHAT'S THE MOST OUTRAGEOUS THING YOU'VE FOUND AT LOGAN AIRPORT?"

BRIAN NICHOLSON INSPECTOR FOR THE U.S. TRANSPORTATION SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

I was conducting a physical hand search of a small, lightweight cooler that a passenger had checked. I opened the cooler and, at first glance, it appeared there was an item inside wrapped in a bunch of garbage bags. As I peeled back each garbage bag, I never could've imagined what I would find inside. I removed the final layer to reveal the severed head of a seal staring back at me. We find some very interesting and unusual things when we're screening bags for explosives, but this was by far the most memorable and probably the most disgusting. I swear to this day the seal winked at me. KYLE WRIGHT

HEAD GAMES

Nick writes in real time.

FRIDAY, 11:10 AM. I'm writing this opening at a three-day journalism conference as an exercise in a class on the personal essay. These words are the result of both a minor assignment and an attempt at a major life change.

I'm an expert procrastinator. Given an hour to complete a 60-minute task, I'll get the job done on time. Given an entire day for the same assignment, and I will fill the empty space like foam sealant. As I prefer to write at home, my apartment is spotless, because how can you write a snappy simile when the ceiling fan needs dusting? But in the past five minutes I've completed the first 103 words for an 800-word column due four days from now. Change is afoot, and hypnosis was my first step.

I should have a healthy distrust of hypnotism. Four years ago, a teacher tried to mesmerize me to greatness. (Continued at 11:50 am, as another assignment.) I never felt I was susceptible to the process—I was too strong, I supposed—but one day after class, he locked my eyelids shut with the power of words. At the start of our sessions, I was excited with this promise of something new, but things quickly deteriorated into nighttime phone conversations in which he prompted me to bark like a dog, and an incident that found my roommate trapped in a bathroom with a bag of this man's dirty underwear. But I still have a cautious optimism. (Edited at 8:15 pm, when I'm usually drinking.)

Sunday, 4:26 pm. Despite the uneasy introduction, I thought hypnotism could help boost my productivity by reprogramming my instinct to stall. So I turned to Avinoam Lerner, a multi-discipline healer in Newton. He's got a lean, sculpted face, non-matching eyes and the voice of an Israeli Garrison Keillor. He's the image your mind conjures of a man capable of molding it. But before we met, I put his work to the test and downloaded his Pure Relaxation program for a red eye back from Denver.

It took me three listens to consciously hear what Lerner says toward the end of the 19-minute program, because I kept falling asleep. The beginning is amusing, as he warns against listening while operating heavy machinery. In the middle, there's what you might expect: soft music, counting, commands to focus on his voice and to let outside noises lead you deeper into relaxation. So there, in a dark cabin somewhere above Iowa, amid the coughs, hums and smell of diapers, I escaped. Stirred awake at the end of the recording, I felt light and hollow, like a Nick-shaped Bundt pan floating on a fountain of air. Whether it was Lerner's words or the 90-minute nap I snuck in before work, it was the most energetic post-red-eye weekday I've ever had.

Monday, 8:45 pm. Four days later, I visited Lerner for a more directed, personal session. He has a small office, muted and clean with a portable radiator set to soothe. There's a letter of commendation from the mayor of Newton on the wall, and with no bag of Skivvies in sight, it became even easier to unwind.

Lerner describes the hypnosis process as cutting the connection to your inner critic. You want to lose weight, but your inner critic says you'll always be fat. Hypnosis lulls that voice to sleep so the positive thoughts can be planted while the defenses are down. The key is you have to want to believe.

After some preliminary relaxation, I sank in a chair, my eyelids sealed, ready for my procrastination instincts to be rewired. "I want you to picture someone in your life who doesn't procrastinate," Lerner instructed. "And when you have someone in mind, I want you to raise your finger." The notion shook my trance, as I don't tend to associate with go-getters, but my mental Rolodex eventually coughed up a serviceable option. Next, he told me to envision walking up a staircase, at the top would be a room, and in the room would be a book. If I believed the solution to my problem was inside, I should raise my finger. I blanked, I stalled, and in the end, I lied with a lift of a digit. But then, as if my finger flicked a switch, the answer came to me.

It's really all about trust. I don't trust the right words to come, so I give them as much time as possible to arrive. (For example, it's now 11 pm.) Perhaps the teacher in my Friday class was on to something when she said you can outrun your own inner critic if you write fast enough.

Or maybe I'm not lazy; I'm just busy. Maybe I've just adapted to what works best for me. As writer Walt Harrington told a Saturday seminar, "Deadlines focus the mind." Or perhaps I'm just indulging in self-delusion for the sake of convenience. (Then again, I wrote those three sentences on Saturday.) But in the end, like hypnotism, I think the key to change is to be open to influence. ✖✖✖

Cheap Thrills

With the "R" word on everybody's lips lately, it's helpful to get far, far away—preferably to a place where you can't read the newspapers or understand what the long, drawn faces are saying on TV. To combat the blues when you're back, though, we've picked four wines from one of those foreign countries that you can drink with a clear conscience. Each one is not only a blind-tasting winner and a serious value, but something that can ease you into forgetting your troubles.

Crios Torrontes Mendoza Argentina, 2008 ($15, Bauer Wine). The latest mystery grape from south of the border poised for a place in the limelight, Torrontes exudes style. It's smooth but aromatic, lively and subtle in the same breath. This one's also got flowers in abundance. Made by Susana Balbo, who turns everything she touches into gold, it's ripe and yeasty, but with more of a lingering mineral statement. Lush and round, pair this Argentinian beauty with a creamy pasta and mushroom dish, or some sautéed shrimp and vegetables.

Lucien Albrecht "Balthazar" Pinot Blanc Reserve Alsace, France, 2007 ($13.99, Gordon's). No oak here either, but this one has a deft vanilla touch and a creamy cheese quality from aging on the yeast. Plus, it's slightly spicy with notes of basil, mint, honey, toasted grains and spring apple. Pinot blanc's way back in the shadows, but in the hands of an Alsace maestro like Albrecht, there's charm, understatement and a mellow texture that makes for an enjoyable pairing with all kinds of seafood dishes.

Cono Sur "Bicycle" Pinot Noir Rapel Valley, Chile, 2008 ($9, Blanchard's Jamaica Plain). OK, for under 15 bucks you don't really expect "terroir expression" or leather in your red pinot, do you? Light crimson and graceful on its feet, the Cono Sur may not be funky but it's a grown-up wine nonetheless. There's an impressive kiss of bright cherry fruit on the nose that carries forward with captivating tart berry flavors, cinnamon undertones and only hints of tannin. If you're craving a red wine that won't pick a fight with your fish or vegetables, look no further.

Bivio Pinot Grigio IGT delle Venezie, Italy, 2007 ($12.50, Brookline Liquor). If you're tired of chardonnays that taste like sickeningly sweet candy, you have to try this pinot grigio. From the first sip, this baby doesn't taste like a concoction made by a scientist in a lab coat. It's actually good. With thirst-quenching acidity, green-apple flavor and a fresh hint of citrus, what's not to like? Chill it, but don't kill it, and you'll find yourself dreaming of summer sunsets with a sizzling plate of soft-shelled crabs.

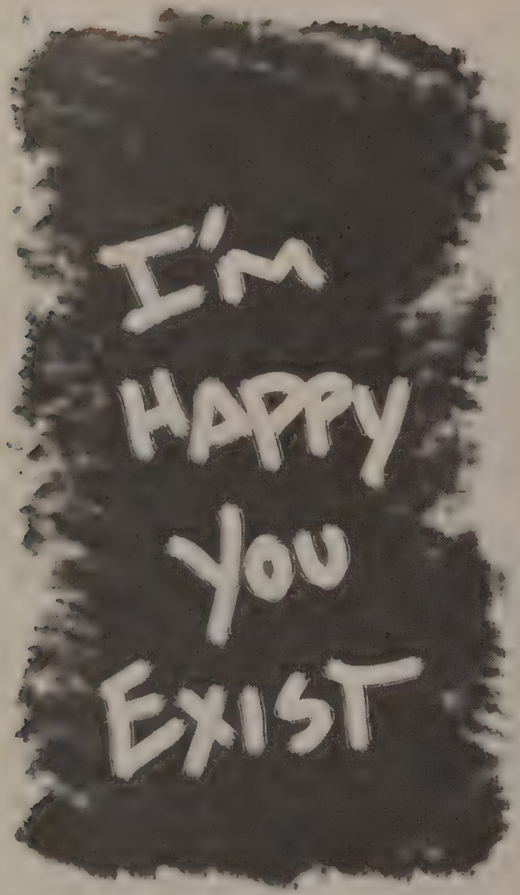
Going Out

OPEN CONTAINER



Jaap Overgaag surveys Charlie's Beer Garden in Harvard Square and nods his head. Spring has only just arrived, but already he's daydreaming of outdoor toasts on sunny afternoons. "Once the umbrellas are up, it absolutely gives you a European feel to the place," he says. "If the temperature is good, a little above 50 degrees and not too much wind, you're golden."

As a Dutchman who emigrated to Boston nearly a decade ago, Overgaag knows what he's talking about. Open-air drinking is hard to find in the Boston area, he says. Sure, a handful of Cambridge establishments—like Grafton Street and Noir—offer outside seating, but sipping a brew under the stars isn't nearly as commonplace here as it is in his hometown of Delft.

It's ironic, then, that Charlie's, an unapologetically American-diner-style joint, is bringing a bit of the Continent to cosmopolitan Cambridge. Yet the place's identity isn't changing, Overgaag says. Guys in flannel shirts and work boots can rub shoulders with physics professors as easily in the garden as they can inside at the bar.

Open through November, the 86-seat garden offers a constantly changing selection of 16 drafts and 32 bottled beers, as well as Charlie's classics, like the double lobster roll special ($11) and the buffalo burger ($10). We recommend the Chimay on draft ($9), a strong Belgian beer that scares away the chills in the early spring and refreshes in the steamy days of summer. JOHN DYER

Impersonals

ODE TO JOY

TO THE PERSON WHO WROTE "I'm happy you exist" in sidewalk chalk on Joy Street: Thank you! I was in a bad mood and staring unhappily at the ground when I saw it. Stopping to look, my mood immediately brightened and I felt better for the rest of the day.

Pleasantly surprised

To everyone on Flight 1933 from Florida:

Thanks to the many tall and muscular people who watched me struggle to jam my lime-green suitcase into the overhead [compartment]. I dropped the bag on my head, rendering me a bit dizzy and quite cranky for the remainder of my voyage. I'm talking to you, sir, the blond in a Red Sox sweatshirt who turned his iPod up and looked out the window instead of taking 12 seconds to help me. Oh, and to the lady with frizzy hair behind me: Tapping your toe and sighing loudly will not get you to your seat any faster. Don't worry, though, I guarantee you will not miss out on Captain Dave's pre-flight speech if you have to wait 40 more seconds to sit down. No one likes being jammed into miniscule seats and sandwiched between a portly couple from Tampa who won't stop talking, but let's just try and make the best out of an unfortunate situation.

My head still hurts

To the old woman at my gym:

OK lady, we need to talk etiquette. Cutting your toenails in the nude is not appropriate. I appreciate the confidence you have in your sagging body but, if you must parade around the locker room in the buff, I pray that you lay a towel down on the bench before your next grooming session. I try to avert my eyes, but the walls are covered in mirrors, so it's nearly impossible not to catch a glimpse of your naked backside. I love my Tuesday night spin class, but if this behavior continues, I might have to wave good-bye to the buns of steel and avoid the gym all together.

LOVE POTIONS

When shopping for a new perfume, I rely on what smells great to me and hope the opposite sex agrees. But sniffing out the perfect scent takes a good hour and results in a tragic loss of neurons, so I consulted Jullian Coleman-Harding, manager and head perfumer of Nantucket Natural Oils, to dish on what's in for spring and what scents are considered aphrodisiacs. "What are really popular right now for men and women are citrus and aquatic notes, because they remind people of warmer climates," says Coleman-Harding. But he's quick to point out each gender's preferences. "Guys are like cavemen when it comes to what we like. We like things that smell like Cinnabons on women—something that makes us want to bite," he explains. "While women like soothing fragrances on men." Based on his advice, here are four new fragrances that are sweet enough for men and comforting enough for women.

REMBRANDT, COME HOME!

An author investigates the greatest art theft in Boston history.

WHETHER PURSUED BY covetous aesthetes or thugs who don't know Van Gogh from Van Morrison, art theft doesn't always pay. Thieves dressed as cops broke into the so-called Gardner Palace late at night in 1990 and pinched one Vermeer, three Rembrandts, five Degas and the top of a Napoleonic battle flag. Yet, it's not clear if they made any money from the job.

Following in the footsteps of art detective Harold Smith, who'd spent years pursuing this unsolved crime, journalist Ulrich Boser took over the catnip to write The Gardner Heist. He obsessively pursued hundreds of suspects and clue-danglers. Exciting and maddeningly fruitless leads included antiques dealers, mobsters, drug dealers, lawyers and guys who descended life's ladder from brainy kids to criminals. Myles Connor, possibly involved, was a precocious thief who nabbed art locally; in jail, he lost his memory. David Turner, "The Teflon Don of the South Shore," became another suspect. And, allegedly, Whitey Bulger offered the paintings to a fence in return for $10 million, but wouldn't accept a counteroffer, so no deal. To this day, forlorn frames sit empty at the Gardner. Although money never splashed into undeserving hands and the paintings remain at large, Boser's zeal makes for an absorbing whodunit. ✖✖✖

Triumph of the Dill

The first batches were just experiments: a few cucumbers, a nub of horseradish, black peppercorns, fistfuls of fresh garlic, a fortnight of moonlight. But the brine Stewart Golomb was brewing up in his East Village apartment packed too much punch to keep in his tiny fridge alone. Now a full-fledged pickle buff, the New York transplant brines enough Super Dill! and Pretty Hot! pickles to stock City Feed and Supply's shelves and satisfy demand from local restaurants. We can't totally dismiss Manhattan's Jewish delis here, but should those famous cukes ever come into competition with Golomb's bracingly dilly batch, they'd be in quite a... well, you know. ELIZABETH BOMZE

PIE'S NOT THE LIMIT

A new Southern-ish restaurant in Cambridge and suburban sprawl

IS RENEE "PETSI" MCLEOD on a sugar high? The eponymous owner of two Petsi Pies shops is set to open her first restaurant within a few weeks, and she's seeing nothing but blue skies.

"I don't buy into this recession," she says. "I don't worry about that. People are always looking for an affordable place to eat something delicious." That place, she says, will be "sorta Southern-ish, a fried chicken and grits place" called Tupelo in the Cambridge space that once was Magnolia's. For dessert? "Lots of pies, sweet potato, pecan. We love beignets. Banana pudding... from scratch."

Handling the savory portion of the menu will be chef Rembrandt "Remsi" Layman, who's cooked at Pomodoro and Whole Foods. "He makes the best gumbo I ever tasted," says McLeod.

DESPITE HARD ECONOMIC TIMES, city-based restaurants continue to set up shop outside Boston city limits. Aquitaine, which initially expanded to Chestnut Hill years ago, plans to open an outpost in Dedham in a huge new shopping center alongside some 80 other stores and restaurants like Ruth's Chris Steak House and Legal Sea Foods. A city-to-suburb move can work well for a small chain. Consider Petit Robert Bistro, which has been bustling since opening in Needham last year. Or it can fail miserably, like the Finale Desserterie & Bakery in the Natick Collection, which closed its doors last December. Stay tuned.

TOUGH TIMES CAN tenderize a steakhouse: KO Prime is offering specials to lure cash-strapped carnivores. "Retro Monday and Tuesday" have all-you-can-eat prime rib for $24.95, and all-you-can-eat chili is five bucks at the bar on weeknights. BYOB—Bring your own Beano.

FINALLY, another opening: Pazzo Restaurant & Bar will take over the Newbury St. location that formerly housed Croma.

Dining { BY ERIN BYERS MURRAY AND WILL GILSON }

TOUCH OF ELEGANCE

L'Espalier proves luxury is worth the price.

WILL IN THE WORLD Will Gilson settles down to a glass of bubbly.

"I NEVER HAVE A PROBLEM with settling down and enjoying meals like this," confessed Will Gilson as he slid into a booth in the new L'Espalier.

Gilson, the chef at Garden at the Cellar in Cambridge, rarely affords himself time to sit, let alone enjoy a three-hour meal. When he isn't in his own kitchen, the social butterfly is hopping from benefit dinners in New York for "research" (read: feasts) to his family's farm in Groton. L'Espalier, which moved from a converted brownstone on Gloucester Street up to the tony Mandarin Oriental last fall, was just the spot for him to splurge.

We settled in with a glass of Westport Rivers Cuvée RJR Brut and took time to study the menu, which ranged from a choose-your-own three-course experience to an extravagant chef's tasting where chef Frank McClelland would decide our fate. Gilson and I selected the seasonal degustation ($104 each) along with wine pairings (an additional $65), handing the reigns to someone else for the night.

Despite our posh surroundings, we quickly launched into a chat about the rough economy. Though Garden at the Cellar remains a casual, neighborhood spot, Gilson said he wholeheartedly supports L'Espalier. "There's always a place for high-end restaurants like this, no matter how much people are spending." Gilson pointed out that Sel de la Terre, L'Espalier's sister restaurant next door, offers an affordable French menu. "It's brilliant the way they've set it up. You can come to one or the other and it works seamlessly," he said.

The front dining room, three quarters full on a Wednesday, proved there's still enthusiasm for high-end fare. As the couple next to us celebrated a birthday, a group across the room snapped pictures of every dish.

Our meal flowed from one decadent dish to the next, all ushered by a trio of keen and educated servers. We started with two different appetizers. I had the baked oysters over a celery root puree paired with Huber riesling, while Gilson's glass of sparkling wine worked wonders with his butter-poached lobster beside fennel brandade.

As we ate, sharing bites along the way, Gilson caught me up on his career, from his days at his family's Groton restaurant, the Herb Lyceum, to Oleana, where he worked with Ana Sortun for almost two years. He told me that running his family's place as a first job "was like having dessert before I got to dinner. I ran this tiny, fantastic kitchen by myself. Some chefs wait their whole careers for that."

Next came two dishes of foie gras—mine spiced with za'atar, a Middle Eastern blend that added fantastic complexity to the fatty meat. "I never would have thought to put those together, but that is awesome," said Gilson. His was more traditional with brioche and fruit compote. Afterward, we shared the two fish courses: roasted cod with squid-ink risotto and candy-striped marlin with golden raisins and white-anchovy vinaigrette.

Grand fromage tasting

McClelland came out to say hello, and the chefs chatted about his new farm—with Gilson offering to donate some greenhouse seedlings—before our entrees arrived. The Colorado rack of lamb, crusted in macadamia nuts, came with a smattering of tiny yellow beads that the server described as "pineapple caviar." True to the name, they popped like citrusy bubbles with each bite. Gilson's plate of beef tenderloin and braised beef short rib was saltier than he would have liked but featured a delicate potato puree.

We were both stuffed by the time our servers rolled out a cheese cart with some 40 selections ranging from goat's milk with washed rinds to stinky, soft Epoisse. We still managed to pick out a dozen from places like Tasmania, Holland and Vermont, and were sipping on Madeira when Gilson's friend and Sel de la Terre chef de cuisine Louis DiBicarri came out to join us.

The two traded jokes as we wrapped up our epic meal with a decadent dessert tasting. Bursting, I headed home while Gilson headed off to a late-night meeting. "This job is never done," he said, waving me off into the night. ×××

IT ALL ADDS UP

My distraction has a first name, and it's A-D-D.

LAST WEEKEND, I went skiing in New Hampshire, and was distraught when I arrived at the condo and realized that I had forgotten the food. I had bought groceries, but in packing the car, I got distracted and left all the perishable items—which is to say, almost everything—on the kitchen counter at home. Once it became evident that we'd be dining out or buying expensive ski-area food for the weekend, I became the obvious goat. Which meant I needed an excuse. "It's not my fault," I protested to my hungry friends. "I have A.D.D."

Now, I don't know if this is true, but if it were I'd have a great explanation for a lot of the gaffes in my life. So I decided to take an online test and figure out whether I have a clinically diagnosable problem, or if I'm just a person who they'd call, back in the unenlightened old days, an "absentminded moron." What follows is a selection of the questions that led to a surprising conclusion.

Are you often easily distracted?

I'm about to click on the "yes" box when it occurs to me that I should write down my answers, in case I forgot the specifics of the questions. So I grab a piece of scrap paper and jot down the first question. Then I realize that writing down all the questions will take forever, so I open a new Word file to paste the whole mess in. Then I hear a news report on the kitchen TV about the NFL boaters who capsized in Florida, and I wonder why they haven't mentioned the reason the boat flipped over in the first place. That gets me thinking about how I still want a boat, so I open Google Earth and start plotting sea voyages. Meanwhile, the news has switched to the model stampede in New York, where a herd of wannabe Next Top Models freaked out en masse. Stampede aside, if you were a single guy in New York, wouldn't you hang out near that audition? There would be literally hundreds of semi-model women, streaming onto the street with rejection fresh in their minds, looking for a shoulder to cry on. I would be there. Now, what was I doing? Right: making a sandwich.

Do you not follow through on instructions and fail to finish duties in the workplace?

I'd say I'm pretty good about following through on instructions. For instance, I once had a boss who forbade shorts at work, even though I had a job where I didn't interact with anyone outside my office. One day it was 90 degrees outdoors, and I wore shorts to work. He called me out on it and demanded I change into pants. I expected this scenario, so I went to the bathroom and put on bright-blue polyester Dickies bellbottoms from the Goodwill. I then rolled them up to just below the knee, so they were polyester clamdiggers—but still, by definition, pants, and thus conforming to the dress code. This did not go over well. I've never been very good at deferring to authority. If I lived in the Middle Ages, I'd probably have been beheaded by a local sheriff by now.

Do you often lose things?

Well, by my definition something's not lost until you never find it again, so we could say I have a lot of things that have been temporarily misplaced for a year or several.

Is it difficult for you to engage in leisure activities quietly?

Not at all. With the exception of my favorite summertime leisure activity, beach screaming.

Do you often blurt out answers before questions have been completed?

Yes, because people often need my help finishing their sentences. If you pause while formulating a thought, I jump right in there with a suggestion. Like, Heather will say, "I hate when you finish my—" and I'll say, "Homework? That makes no sense. You're not a student and you don't have homework. And if you did, why would you hate for me to finish it? I'm just being helpful. Unless it's math. In which case, you're probably better off hiring a tutor." And then she gets annoyed and says, "I was going to say—" and I jump right back with, "Breakfast." Which is the only other thing that makes sense.

Do you fidget with your hands or feet?

I can disengage the tendons on my left middle finger, from the second knuckle down. When I do that, my fingertip becomes floppy, creating the illusion that it's only connected to my hand by the skin. People touch it and get grossed out. But I wouldn't say that I do this "often." Just at parties.

Are you often "on the go" or act as if "driven by a motor"?

I often make motor noises with my mouth when I'm running around the house.

Do you often fail to pay close attention to details or make careless mistakes in your work or other activities?

Your parents made a careless misteak whatever this is boring i'm out of here

There were a few more questions, but I'll skip to the conclusion: "The answers you provided are consistent with many symptoms of AD/HD." Bingo. In my mind, Robin Williams is hugging me right now and telling me it's not my fault. And that's the same thing I'm gonna say next time I finish someone's sentence in the workplace while not wearing any pants. ✖✖✖

WAY OF THE FIST

Hockey is literally fighting for respect.

TO THINK I WAS starting to enjoy hockey again. Now the damn powers that be have started posturing and screwing with a game that had reemerged, once again, as watchable.

No question that over the last half-dozen years, professional hockey had slipped a peg or two on the TV sports totem pole, behind bass fishing and barely ahead of the German pro soccer league. But it was beginning to change this fall and winter around here. Your Boston Bruins—the Bruins you and I used to claim as ours—were drawing eyeballs all over New England.

While they've made a run at the top spot the entire season, one reason they were making waves is that they're tough. And yes, they are fighting. There was once a time when the Big Bad Boston Bruins ran this city. The Sox and Patriots, now the Big Cheeses, were second fiddle. I used to kid with my former colleague at NECN, anchorman Tom Ellis, that back in the day the four biggest personalities in Boston were named Orr, Yastrzemski, Sanderson and Ellis. Sure, I was playing with the truth a bit, but it was pretty close.

Fighting in hockey has been part of the game from the beginning of time, and to think of the game without it is scary on many levels, starting with the reality of hockey being the weakest of the four major professional sports organizations in our country. Hockey is a game that remains a work in progress as far as its American fan base goes. There just are too many franchises in too many regions where fans don't know the difference between a hockey puck and a distributor cap.

Where did it all go wrong? It started with expansion and it may have ended with the lockout in 2004. My beef is in the middle somewhere when the NHL tried to eliminate fighting.

The league vowed to crack down on fighting by installing a penalty system that crippled teams engaged in the art of throwing fists. This virtually eliminated brawling from the game and drove away fans, like me, in droves.

But guess what? Fighting is back and slowly the fans are, too. The game is on the upswing around here on account of winning victories, but also because we see that the Bruins can stand up for themselves and each other. I'll be honest. I love watching Milan Lucic and Scott Thornton defend their honor on the ice.

Lucic says the guys are smart. The object isn't to hurt anyone. The object is to play the game the right way. And if somebody doesn't, somebody will pay with fisticuffs.

Thornton is adamant about allowing fighting. "I know what I'm signing up for when I drop the gloves," he says. "I trust the other guy. I don't want them to eliminate fighting. No way."

While it seems crazy to think that fighting should be allowed in a sport other than boxing or mixed martial arts (and it probably is), I believe that fighting has a place in pro hockey. The game has always been policed down on the ice by the players themselves. They're the ones skating around for 60 minutes on a surface as hard as concrete, with a big stick in their hands. The game is dangerous.

Former Bruins enforcer Lyndon Byers becomes enraged at the thought of an NHL without some fists flying every so often. He says the latest crackdown was a knee-jerk reaction to the death of a 21-year-old amateur player who died as a result of a hockey fight in Ontario. Although that was a tragic occurrence, it is extremely rare. Byers points out that if guys were free do whatever they want on the ice, without being held accountable, the game would be even more unsafe.

"The ability of the stars is amazing," said Byers, still awed by the game. "I loved watching Cam Neely and Wayne Gretzky. But let's not forget about the big hip check or the fight that sends the Garden into frenzy. The attraction for fans is real."

Another former Bruins tough guy, Jay Miller, is on the same page with just about every hockey fan I've talked to. Miller, speaking to me from his sports bar, the Courtyard in Falmouth, says it had been a decade since he really watched a hockey game and that no one would ever ask him to put a Bruins game on the bar TVs.

"I am watching a lot more now," he adds. "It seems like the game has found itself again. Fans want to see the hitting and physical play. And they want to see a fight or two every so often. I know I do."

Miller doesn't go as far as saying fighting is a necessity, but he thinks it keeps players honest. "Fighting makes guys respect each other on the ice. And that's important."

Miller knows what he's talking about. He once protected one of the greatest players ever: Wayne Gretzky himself. "When you have fighting, guys are not going to keep taking whacks at some of the stars all game long."

It was up to guys like Miller and Byers to police the ice, and that they did, making the game a safer place. I've come to realize that the only people who don't want fighting in hockey are people who have no interest in hockey. ✖✖✖

TAKE 5

The School of Sports { RICH LEVINE }

ON 'TEK, TUUKKA, PERK AND STEVE HARVEY

3 Opening Day Sox Storylines

Hey Bay Bay No one talks about Jason Bay, but truth is, he's still the closest thing Boston has to filling the crippling void left by Manny. Thankfully, it doesn't appear Bay's taking his new role lightly—he spent most of the off-season training on a Jack McCormick tackling dummy.

Counting on Smoltz? On March 25, after throwing from the mound for only the second time since June, John Smoltz called the session "awkward." Ah, just what you want to hear from your 41-year-old post-season ringer. Guess that's why God invented Brad Pennys.

How About Dice-K? Matsuzaka displayed a side of himself in the WBC that's yet to surface in the majors. Which is to say, he pitched like there were two pineapples hanging between his legs. If MLB Dice-K can throw with the grit and confidence of WBC Dice-K, the Cy Young could be on its way back to Boston.

FINE, 2 MORE

Up and Down With Clay After a stellar 2007, we dubbed Clay Buchholz the next Greg Maddux. Then, after an awful sophomore campaign, Red Sox Nation jumped ship faster than a UConn recruit. Now it's year three, and Clay's been one of the deadliest pitchers in camp. Move over, Maddux. Hello, a right-handed Sandy Koufax! (Only if Koufax banged Playmates.)

Signing Off Once in a while, we'll hear about an old athlete or celebrity who's died and think, "Wow, they were still alive?" That's how it felt reading about Curt Schilling's retirement. Did anyone really think he'd pitch again? Have you seen Curt recently? He looks more like Steve Buscemi than he does a major league pitcher.

5 THOUGHTS ON THE SEASON'S FINAL MONTH

Truth Serum His numbers may be down this season, but when it comes to the fourth quarter, we don't care if he's playing with oven mitts and an eye-patch: Paul Pierce is our man. In the last two minutes of a game, he's simply a Top 3 NBA player, a guy who can take on the best defenders in the world and treat them with the dignity of Kobe Bryant's housekeeper.

The Rondo Obsession Grows Do you realize that at the beginning of the 2020 season, Rajon Rondo will still be two years younger than Jason Kidd is now? That's ridiculous, especially since he's already the best point guard in the upcoming Eastern Conference playoffs.

Move Over, Hakeem It's time to anoint the latest and greatest signature NBA-post move: the Perky Jerky. If Kendrick Perkins shot the ball last season, it meant one of two things: Either the clock was running out, or he'd just taken a bad shot. But in 2009, Perk's offensive arsenal has him looking like a (very) poor man's Al Jefferson. Three years ago, we'd have settled for a rich man's Matt Wenstrom.

And It Feels So Good They haven't shared much court time, but there's still a storybook feel to the Kevin Garnett/Stephon Marbury reunion. Knowing KG, and we absolutely don't, he never got over what happened with Steph, and probably never dreamed there'd be a chance to make amends. If they manage to win a title together, it'd be the most heartfelt sports moment since A-Rod made out with his mirror.

Is There Moore? The jury's still out on whether Mikki Moore will be of any use to the Celtics. One second he looks decent, and the next he's running around like a strung-out Mark Blount, fouling guys like it's a game of Arch Rivals. Regardless, we know that Mikki Moore is no PJ Brown.

4 DATES TO WATCH

4/6 It's Opening Day at Fenway Park, as the Sox host Tampa Bay in a rematch of last year's ALCS. To commemorate the event, NESN will preempt the game with a five-hour Steve Harvey Show marathon.

4/9 It's the first round of the 2009 Masters, where this year's tagline has been changed from "A Tradition Unlike Any Other" to "Four Days of Tiger Making Jim Nantz Horny."

4/11 Captain Jason Varitek turns 37. For the record, 'Tek's looking to become the first Red Sox position player in 29 years to play more than 100 games in a season after his 37th birthday. It might be another 29 years before anyone cares.

4/12 A loss tonight in Cleveland would mark the 10th straight Celtics defeat in the land of soda pop and tennis shoes. That doesn't bode well for Boston, especially with the NBA ready to implement its new "LeBron doesn't have to dribble inside the three-point line" rule for the playoffs.

1 ONE LEGEND IN THE MAKING

We love that the Bruins are relevant again, but they still need that one transcendent star to officially bring the casual fan back to hockey. Enter Tuukka Rask. Not only is the 22-year-old goalie a world-class talent, but he's also batshit crazy! Shut up, Tuukka... just shut up! You had us at the second thrown milk crate.

"I love impersonating Arianna Huffington. I just love her crazy-ass metaphors."

Soroff On MICHAELA WATKINS

The newest addition to SNL cracks wise about bladder control, nose jobs and the awesomeness of Neil Patrick Harris.

ONE OF SATURDAY NIGHT LIVE'S NEWEST CAST MEMBERS, MICHAELA Watkins was born in upstate New York and raised in Wellesley. After graduating from Wellesley High, she studied theater and acting at Boston University. From 1996 to 2000, she lived in Portland, Ore., where she was involved in regional theater, and then later moved to Los Angeles, where she was a member of the Groundlings theater troupe. Her other credits include The New Adventures of Old Christine, Californication, Grey's Anatomy, Without a Trace, Malcolm in the Middle, Charmed and Medium. She was added to the SNL cast last November, following the departure of Tina Fey and Amy Poehler. She's already become an audience favorite for her impressions of celebrities like Arianna Huffington, Anne Coulter and Barbara Walters. Watkins, 37, currently lives in New York.

Jonathan Soroff: Let's start with your name. Were your parents hoping for a boy?
Michaela Watkins: Yes. But if I'd been a boy, they would have named me Michelle.

You're too pretty to be funny.
Awwww. Are you kidding me? Thank you. My 13-year-old self is hugging you.

Who's your favorite celebrity to impersonate?
I love impersonating Arianna Huffington. I just love her crazy-ass metaphors. I also like impersonating pretty much anyone I've ever had to work for, as in restaurant owners, managers, bartenders, etc. I've worked in a lot of restaurants.

What's your best feature?
I'm gonna say my nose, and here's why: I read that somebody said, "I don't think Michaela Watkins is hot. I mean, if she got a nose job I'd do her." So I think I'm going to keep my nose so I never get hit on by that guy.

Were you the class clown?
I was a little more under the radar. I wasn't disruptive, but I was a goofball. Both my parents are teachers, so I had that weird respect. But as soon as the bell rang, I definitely was the one going, "This is you when you eat!"

Ever make anyone pass liquid through their nose in the cafeteria from laughing?
Yeah, definitely. And I did it, too. I had really funny friends. All my life, I've surrounded myself with really funny people, and they make me laugh really hard.

What's the most fun part of SNL*?*
The after-party, because you know you have all day Sunday to sleep. And 'cause you accomplish a lot in a week there, whether you have much to show for it or not. It does feel like a big accomplishment.

It must be gratifying to see the turnaround from idea to live TV in just one week.
Definitely. Even getting an idea into dress rehearsal is exhilarating and exciting.

What happens when you laugh during a sketch?
I try to make it look like there's a reason for the character to be crying. I'm really good at not breaking too much on stage, although, when I was at the Groundlings, I had my moments. It happens at the table read. I will have skimmed through it, and when I hear the lines read out loud, I just lose it.

Biggest faux pas you ever made in an audition or a performance?
One time, I was auditioning for a film and they said I could improvise a little bit. I decided that my character was going to fall asleep. They were a little confused when I started snoring. As far as a performance, I think in the Groundlings one time somebody made me laugh and I might have peed a little bit. [Laughs.]

Thank God for Depends.
I never appreciated them until that moment.

How competitive is the SNL cast?
Not at all. I've heard the stories and was surprised. Again, I'm new, but I haven't seen it.

Favorite guest host?
Alec Baldwin and Neil Patrick Harris. I love the way Alec comports himself around the set. He really knows what he's doing. He's so smart. He's got an eye on each camera and knows exactly what's being shot when. I like a man who takes control. [Laughs.] And Neil was just game for anything. He's really affable and just such a pro and so charming. Everything he did was funny. He's my boy toy.

*What about [*SNL creator] Lorne Michaels?
Have I ever touched Lorne Michaels? No. [Laughs.] But I do love the guy. I mean, he gave me the best job that I think exists in entertainment.

You did Grey's Anatomy. Was that set a viper's nest?
If it is, I didn't see it. I just laid in a bed for an entire week and had people poke and prod me. They're very accurate about the medical science on that show. There's a nurse there who says, "No, the blue tube is never on top." They don't mess around.

Is Californication the best show on cable?
I don't have Showtime. [Laughs.] So I never saw it. But I remember sitting at the table reading and my jaw hit the floor when I realized that I had to use the term "shrimping," which I thought was having sex with midgets. But it turns out it's sucking on toes.

Is there a subject you'd never touch in comedy?
No.

OK, finish this joke: Obama walks in on Hillary and Michelle...
This is so mean of you. OK. Barack Obama walks in on Hillary and Michelle, and he says, "Now that's what I call a stimulus package!"

Favorite knock-knock joke?
The interrupting cow, but what I love about it is the way my friend's mother would ruin it. She'd say, "Mom, knock-knock." [Her mom would] say, "Who's there?" And when my friend said, "Interrupting cow," her mother would say, "Well, hello, cow." I just thought that was a hilarious way to ruin a knock-knock joke.

Thing you miss most about Boston?
Cobblestone streets. A sense of history. The architecture. I think it's such a beautiful city.

Last question: Can you do the accent?
It's frickin' awesome and wicked pissah! ✖✖✖

The winery has a way with heartier grapes.

GREENVALE VINEYARDS

When it comes to drinking wine, I'm all about inner beauty. Forget the big, brawny reds and A-list, celebrity vintners. I want my wine to have a sense of time and place. It has to taste like where it comes from.

So when I decide to take advantage of a late-winter lull and escape somewhere picturesque, entertaining and scented with hints of saltiness and ripe fruit, it isn't Napa. It's the Southeastern New England wine trail.

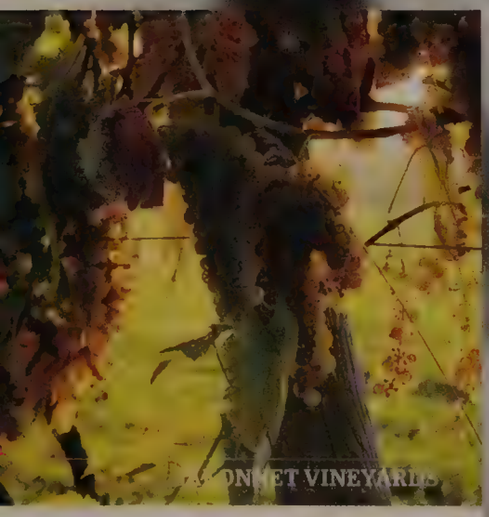
This little corner of the wine world is ideally suited for a number of hearty grape varietals including chardonnay, pinot noir and hybrids like vidal blanc. We have our own AVA, or American Viticultural Area, laid out along the southern coast of Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut, where producers make stellar sparkling and still whites, plus a few under-the-radar, but fully drinkable, reds.

Along that AVA, there's a Coastal Wine Trail that includes eight winery stops from the tip of western Rhode Island to the outer reaches of Cape Cod. Planning my route, I decide to cherry-pick stops that will keep me from backtracking; Greenvale Vineyards is my first destination. Just 90 minutes south of Boston, in Portsmouth, R.I., it produces wines I've seen in city liquor stores and restaurants, but that I've never tasted.

An old road takes me down to the winery, and, from a crest, I get a spectacular view of the hilly vineyard and waterfront just beyond. The property is managed by Nancy Wilson, and they've been making wine since the 1990s. At the center of its 70-acre plot lies a restored 1860s-era stable which is now the tasting room. Inside, I peruse the bottles for sale until a long-haired brunette strolls in at the sound of creaking floorboards.

Leading me through my samplings, she gets into her own history with the winery (eight years and counting) and describes the wines. "Our pinot gris usually surprises people," she says. "Maybe it's the finish? Tastes like summer to me."

Greenvale Vineyards' winemaker, Richard Carmichael, clearly has a way with heartier grapes, like the cayuga, a North American hybrid which he blends with vidal blanc in his Skipping Stone wine.



After the tasting, I saunter out to survey the grounds and come face to face with the vineyard's two Scottish Highland cattle. The animals are so massive their horns are as long as I am tall. I stand listening to them chew the cud as we stare at the ocean lapping at the rocky shore.

I hit the road, heading northeast and then south towards Little Compton, which sits across the bay from Greenvale Vineyards. The winding West Main Road breezes me past reed-covered inlets and straight toward Sakonnet Vineyards, marked by its low-lying stone walls and estate-like lawn.

I'm greeted by two wire-framed sculptures that look like they're playing leapfrog, a fitting welcome for this playful spot. Purplish pink shutters and doors frame the weathered barn and farmhouse. Inside, I come across a perky, blonde attendant who looks just bored enough to be thrilled at my arrival. "It's still awfully slow," she comments. "But we just released our Petite White yesterday, so you'll be one of the first to try it."

And I do, along with a few others like the Cock of the Walk (a blend of vidal blanc and chardonnay), the Rhode Island Red (which I liked so much I promptly purchased), and the Winterwine, a golden, honeyed sip of apricots and peaches made from flash-frozen grapes. The labels catch my eye, and it turns out two are designed by students at the Rhode Island School of Design. That, coupled with the fact that the winery and vineyard are run mainly by women, converts me into an instant fan.

A hit of kiwi comes across the nose.

I tell my host I'm coming back with my favorite female wine drinkers this summer to toast these fantastic blends. "Make it July or August," she says. "The restaurant will be open, so you can pull out picnic blankets and set up shop on the lawn." Before I have the chance to give her my agenda for the rest of the day, she says, "You should check out Westport Rivers. It's just a few miles up the road. They have great sparklers."

I take her ringing endorsement and drive 15 minutes of twisting back roads to the neighboring vineyard at Westport Rivers. Its bubblies are all over Boston wine lists; I've tried the 2003 Brut Cuvée RJR at L'Espalier and Neptune Oysters. But determined to hear about Westport Rivers' other grapes, I launch into the tasting and happily discover that it grows and bottles Rkatsiteli (pronounced "are-CAT-si-telli").

"This is actually the fourth most widely grown grape varietal in the world," the pierced, blonde tasting guide tells me. Ignorant of it before, I find this Georgian varietal's omnipresence somewhat surprising, but she reassures me: "It's usually used for blending, but we're one of a few in the country that bottle it on its own. You'll taste something like a really dry riesling from it." That and a hit of kiwi comes across the nose, but it's much dryer than I expect. "Try it with Asian food," she dares me. We tackle a few other wines, like the 2007 rosé of pinot noir, but the R-kat lingers the longest.

I open a bottle of pinot blanc and sip.

TRURO VINEYARDS

Afterward, I hook up with sales manager Craig Caesar, who gives me a quick tour of the winery while pointing out its similarities to the Champagne houses in France. Everything—from the three noble grapes Westport Rivers grows and blends (chardonnay, pinot noir, pinot Meunier) to how the bottles are disgorged—is done in the traditional Champagnoise method. "But, you know, they don't want us to call it Champagne so we respect that," he tells me.

By this point, I'm looking forward to a cat nap, but Caesar recommends that I check out Travessia, the newest spot on the Coastal Wine Trail. "It's an urban winery, right in New Bedford," Caesar tells me. "The winemaker's using grapes from local vineyards so it still falls within our AVA."

I hit the road heading east towards the Cape and swing through New Bedford for a peek. Indeed, the urban space does blend wines from grapes sourced solely from Massachusetts; the winemaker, Marco Montez, also works with Running Brook Vineyards (a spot I want to visit but can't since I'm racing daylight). The friendly tasting room is peppered with mosaic tiles and massive oak barrels filled with Montez's batches of chardonnays.

Wanting a longer pour, I cruise onto the Cape and out to Chatham, where a room at the Chatham Bars Inn is a steal in the off-season. The wine cellar here is a treat I don't get to experience. It's a private subterranean space filled with some 5,000 bottles, but diners can request it for special occasions and parties. Instead, I open a bottle of Greenvale Vineyards' pinot blanc in my room and sip my way into a happy buzz while watching the ocean froth beneath my window.

My second day finds me coasting up Route 6 where the ocean slips in and out of view all the way up to Truro Vineyards, situated near the northernmost tip of Cape Cod. Taken over by the Roberts family as a retirement pursuit in 2007, the vineyard and winery have seen at least 15 years of success and, this spring, there are plans to open a new tasting pavilion. A huge, white clapboard farmhouse sits at the center of this off-the-beaten-path property while vineyards stretch up a hill and out of sight. Despite the long drive and somewhat early hours, I'm eager to try a nip or two of the winery's chardonnay but find the place empty. It is, after all, late winter on the Cape, so my next taste of the winery's Lighthouse Series Cranberry Red will have to wait until later this spring. Blended with cranberries, the wine combines unexpected flavors, making it not only unique, but surprisingly delicious.

Just like the Southeastern New England wine trail. ✖✖✖

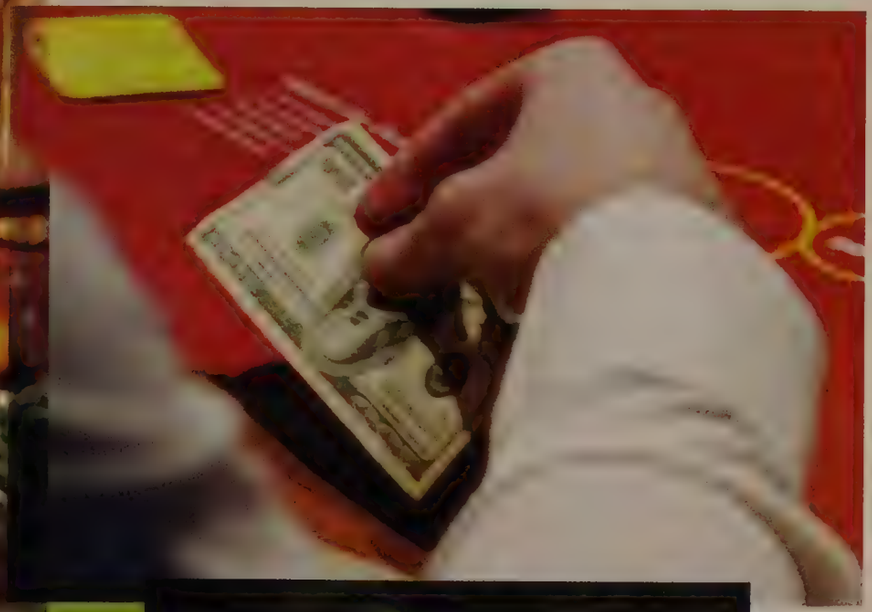
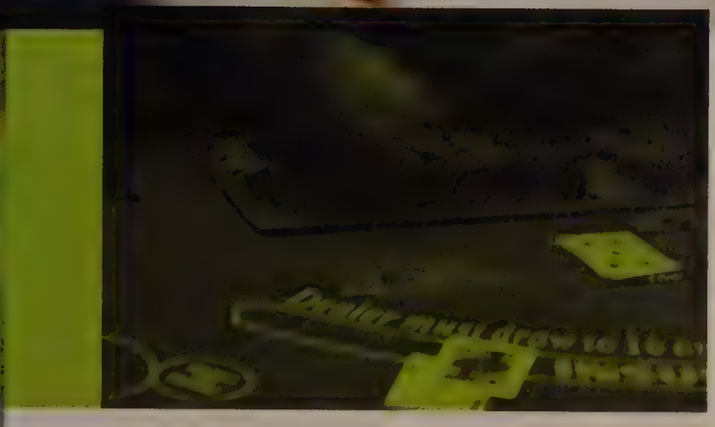
IT'S ALL ABOUT A BENJAMIN

AT MOHEGAN SUN, HOW MUCH FUN CAN YOU SQUEEZE OUT OF $100?



BY EZRA DYER ♣ PHOTOGRAPHS BY DAVID CICCONI



I STEP INTO THE CASINO AT MOHEGAN SUN WITH DREAD IN MY BELLY. I'VE GOT $100 AND A CHALLENGE—TO EXPLORE HOW LONG A MISERLY GAMBLER CAN COAST ON A HUNDRED BUCKS IN A PLACE LIKE THIS. TWELVE HOURS? TWENTY-FOUR? FIVE MINUTES? I MIGHT BE HERE OVERNIGHT, COMPED A ROOM AND A STEAK DINNER FOR MY BALLSY AND SUCCESSFUL WAGERS, OR I MIGHT BE DONE AFTER FIVE HANDS OF BLACKJACK. WHICH WOULD MAKE WRITING this story kind of tough. But I'm optimistic, because the last time I went to a casino, I lost seven straight hands of $25 blackjack. So, in theory, karma should be swinging back in my direction. Since it was blackjack that kicked my ass last time, I figure I should return to a blackjack table to exact my revenge. But with only $100 to live on, I can't mess around with $25 tables. Or $15 tables. Or $10 tables. Fortunately, Mohegan Sun—in deference to the wonderful economy—now has $5 blackjack tables open around the clock. Unfortunately, those tables are constantly mobbed by low-rollers like myself, so it takes a personal escort from the pit boss to get me a seat for my inaugural hand. I change my hundo for chips and place a red five-dollar chip on the table. As the crowd leans in around me, the dealer throws down my cards. Blackjack. I feel hostility from the spectators, as half the people here doubtlessly think that I somehow stole their luck. Nobody feels more indignation than a $5 blackjack player.

So I get up and leave. One hand played, one win, $107.50 in my pocket—I'm feeling good and I'm not in a hurry. I meander over to the penny slots to see if I can camp out long enough to mooch a free drink. After 10 minutes, there's no sign of a waitress (I have a feeling that the comp cocktails don't flow freely over in the penny-slot area) and I'm down to my last $107.37. I head off in search of a new game, because if I'm going to make my money last, I can't just be wasting 13 cents like that without getting something in return.

I decide that I need to give myself a scheduled reason to leave the casino, so that I don't get sucked into any one game for too long. So I grab a spa menu and peruse it for the cheapest treatment available. That turns out to be a paraffin foot treatment for $24. I have absolutely no idea what a paraffin foot treatment is, but nevertheless I schedule an appointment in an hour's time.

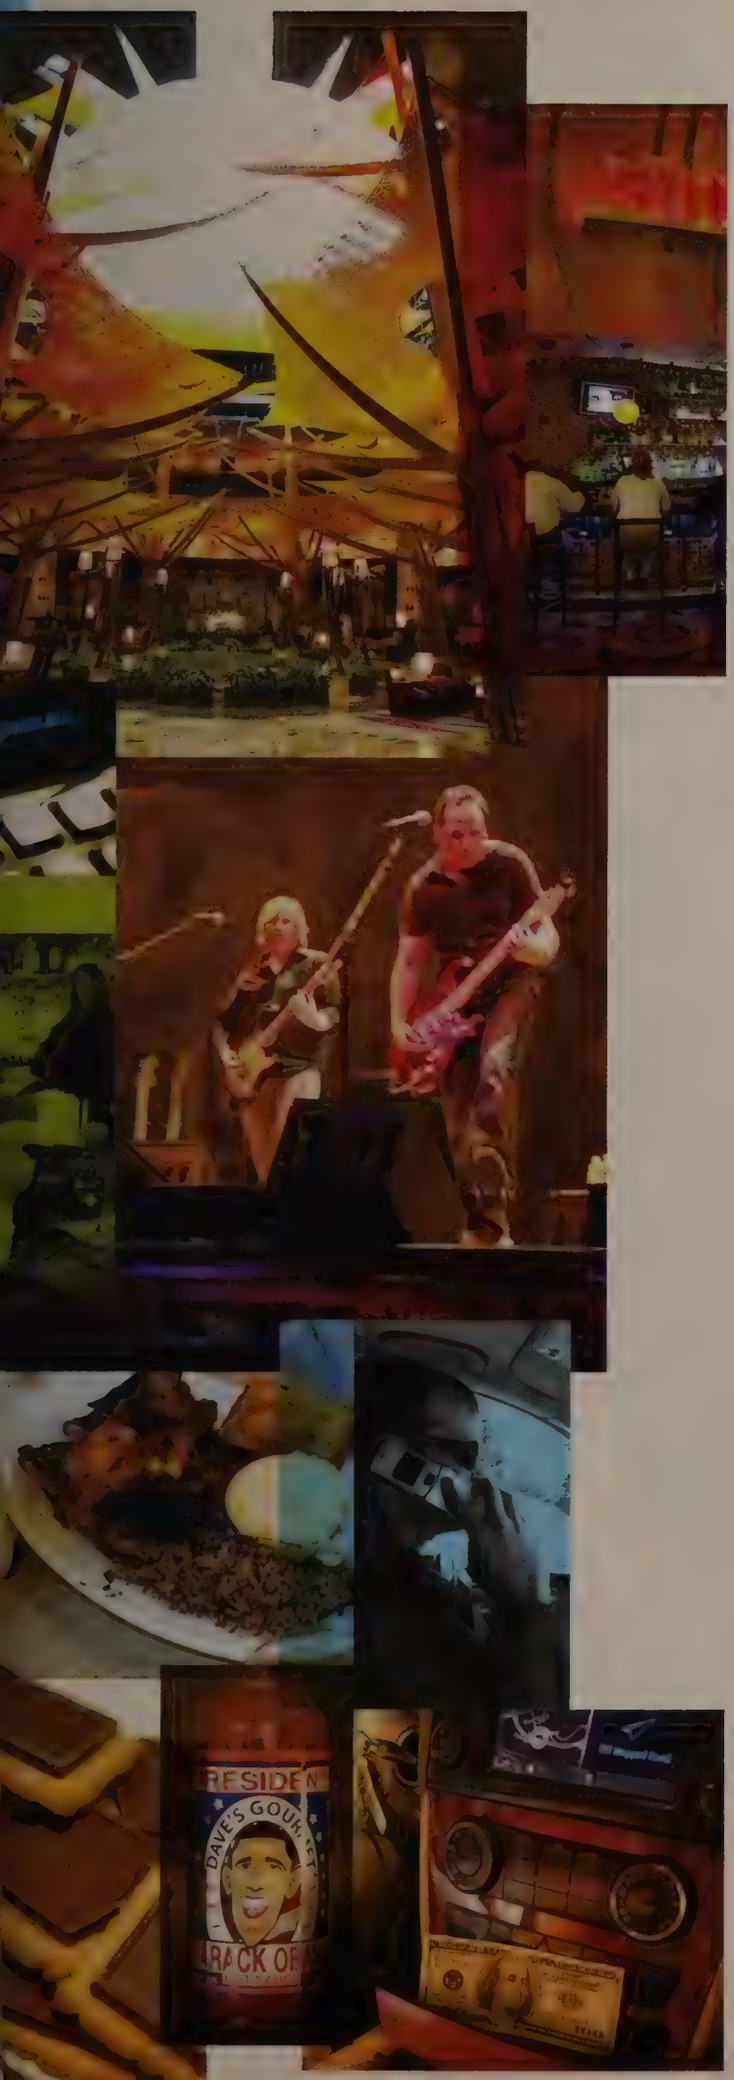
Back in the casino, I'm looking for a way to kill my hour while scheming a beer or two and not getting hosed. That leaves me very few options, since there aren't many games I know how to play. Craps always looks like fun, and I've heard good things about Let It Ride, but now is no time to be learning the ropes. So I head for the one game that, regardless of the outcome, will at least get me a free beer: video poker.

Now, you can sit at a video poker machine and hope that a cocktail waitress comes around, but the better move is to go to one of the watering holes that have the machines built right into the bar. That way, the bartender gets you your beer, and you can bet your $20 as excruciatingly slow as you please. Hmmm, I've got two pairs of face cards. Should I keep those? Let me mull it over. I lose about five bucks, but then hit a straight and win my way back to my original $20. I cash out and congratulate myself on my free beer.

Since it's getting close to dinnertime, I wander past the restaurants to see where I might be able to eat, depending on my fortunes. Outside the Michael Jordan's Steak House, there's a giant quotation from His Airness scrawled on the wall: "My advice would be just enjoy the game." Easy for you to say, Michael. I'm pretty sure you usually have more than $100 with which to enjoy the game. On the opposite terrace, I spy Big Bubba's BBQ offering all-you-can-eat ribs and chicken for $19.95. Dang. I knew I should've worn my all-you-can-eat jacket, the one with the plastic-lined pockets.

I'M TOURING THE CASINO FLOOR, TRYING TO DECIDE WHICH TABLE FEELS LUCKY, WHEN I PASS A MACHINE CALLED "LIVE LOBSTERS DANCING NIGHTLY."

Upstairs at the spa, the receptionist directs me to the waiting room, where, to my delight, I find a jar full of complementary apples. I'm still munching my apple when I'm brought to an elaborate massage chair of the type you see in Brookstone. Apples, massage chairs—what more could you want? Well, how about getting your dogs dipped in hot wax? I plunge each foot into a tray of wax three times, and then a woman puts plastic bags around my feet to keep the wax from smearing all over the chair. She leaves me alone for a few minutes while the wax cools, and I find it mildly discomfiting to peer down at my shiny, motionless feet tied off inside plastic bags. "Hey, there, nice to meet you. 'Round here they call me Johnny Cadaver-Foot." She returns and peels the wax off, and I walk out the door with softened feet and a ridiculous pair of disposable flip-flops that I discard before I reach the elevator.



I've now been here two and a half hours, and I've had a spa treatment, an apple and a beer, and played blackjack, video poker and slots. And I still have $83.37 left. I need to know whether I'll be dining at Jordan's or the food court, so I have to put my money back on the line. I wander back down to the $5 blackjack tables, but they're still mobbed. So I make my way over to a game that's been a cruel mistress to me in the past: roulette.

Other than the $5 blackjack, it's all $15 minimums now, so this could wreck my bankroll pretty quickly. I put $15 on red. The ball hops along the rim and lands on black. There goes a fifth of my money. But I've gotta stick in there and believe in red. Bingo. I'm a winner. Now I decide to get crazy, mix it up and bet on black. The ball spins around the wheel… and takes a crazy kick, hopping out onto the floor. It's a do-over, and the second time around, the ball lands on… get ready… the number 11! Which, as you problem gamblers will know off the top of your head, is black. I've won two out of three and made my way back up to $98.37, so I walk away feeling lucky and exhilarated. Knowing that you have a hard limit of $100 definitely intensifies the suspense of a $15 roulette bet. When you think of wagers in terms of what they actually represent—like, whether you'll have a fat rib eye for dinner or the $7.45 double-hotdog special—then the bets become much more interesting.

I'm feeling flush enough for the all-you-can-eat ribs and chicken dinner, washed down with a beer. Even though I'm full, I order a second helping of ribs just to get my money's worth. Dinner runs $32, so I'm now down to $66.37. Rather than heading right back into the casino, though, I head for the Wolf Den bar, where the cover band Wicked Peach is playing. Cover charge: free.

I deplete my reserves a little further by ordering a beer, because I'm one of the only people in here this early, and frankly I feel like I'm being personally serenaded by Third Eye Blind. Which makes me uncomfortable, and desirous of drink. "Hey everyone!" yells the singer, "Wednesday is the new Tuesday!" So true. Someone yells something unintelligible toward the stage. "What?" he replies, "Sorry, I don't know how to play 'You suck.'" Wicked Peach, it turns out, has pretty solid between-song banter.

Via sign language, I communicate with the waiter that I'd like the tab for my beer. It's so loud in here that I can't hear what the charge is, so I hand him a $10 bill and he scoots off. I hope he comes back with change. This isn't like a strip club Bud Light, is it, where the "free entertainment" really means $10 beers? Thankfully not, as he returns and hands me $5.50 in change. I tip him $1.87, to put my cash at $60 even.

I'm not ready to return to the tables, so I walk to the shopping area to see if I can buy anything ridiculous. Because that's what you're supposed to buy at casino stores—ridiculous items that you'd never consider purchasing unless you just won a pile of money that temporarily scrambled your notions of value. Casino stores are where you go to buy a $500 lizard-skin hat, or that signed portrait of Wayne Newton that you didn't know you needed. Or, in my case, a bottle of President Barack Obama Hot Sauce. Did you know that you could buy President Barack Obama Hot Sauce at Mohegan Sun? Well, now you do. It costs $8. And I didn't know I needed it until I saw it, therefore it was an appropriate casino-shopping purchase.

But now I'm down to $52. I linger around the Godiva store long enough to eat two free samples, but sooner or later I'm gonna have to put my dough on the line. I'm touring the casino floor, trying to decide which table feels lucky, when I pass a machine called "Live Lobsters Dancing Nightly." Now, I love lobsters, and once in Vegas I put some money in a machine called Lucky Larry's Lobstermania and won a bunch of money. I have a good feeling that Live Lobsters Dancing Nightly might continue my crustacean-based streak of fortune, so I put $10 in the machine and start randomly punching buttons. I have no idea how this works—lines criss-cross on the screen, and slot machine symbols (lobsters, wine, butter) scroll down when I hit one of the buttons in front of me. But no matter what I do, the big, lobster-emblazoned box remains silent, counting down my credits. Until, suddenly, it erupts in a frenzy of tinkling piano and dancing lobsters. I pushed a button that caused what looked like a map of the Tokyo subway system to overlay the screen, and apparently that was a good thing, because now these lobsters are dancing like mofos as my credits soar.

When the music stops, I print my voucher and realize that for all that drama, I only won $10. Indeed, that was a strange way to make $10. But those dancing lobsters just paid for my President Barack Obama Hot Sauce! These are the types of thoughts you have when you've been in a casino for too long.

I decide to ride my luck over to a $10 blackjack table, and I find a seat at one where a huge hand just got dealt. "That was a $600 swing right there!" says the guy to my left. He's obviously the gregarious guy at the table, and the kind of fired-up character you don't find at the $5 tables. As I approach the empty seat next to him, he says, "Sit your butt down and win some money, my friend! I'm glad you're here, because I need to slow down." If there's one thing I'm good at, it's slowing down a game of blackjack.

My first hand, I hit blackjack. I go back and forth a couple hands, winning more than losing, and I realize that I've got $85 in chips. I put down a $15 bet and win. I'm back to $100. At that point, I do something brave and unexpected, something that draws protests of disbelief from Gregarious Guy next to me—I walk away.

The way I figure it, I've had three beers, had my feet dipped in wax, listened to live music, gone shopping, eaten barbecue chicken and ribs (and an apple and chocolates), and played blackjack, roulette, video poker, slots and whatever the hell you call Live Lobsters Dancing Nightly. I've been entertained for six hours, and I've done all of that for free.

I didn't technically win any money. But I didn't lose any, either. And by my accounting, that's a winning night out at the casino. ✖✖✖

FIRST CLASS

PASSPORT BOUTIQUE OWNER JESSICA GOOD LANDS THE LOOK.

BY AMANDA KNORR PHOTOGRAPHS BY MICHAEL PIAZZA

As a globe-trotter, Jessica Good knows that packing for a trip can be fun, and keeping the hassle to a minimum is crucial. Therein lies the concept behind her Cambridge store Passport, a boutique that satisfies the wannabe jet-setter (and real-life commuter) in all of us by selling everything from cashmere-bejeweled slippers to laptop covers and wrinkle-proof dresses.

When it comes to her personal style, Good incorporates comfort into her travels. No, she doesn't advocate wearing pajama pants and beat-up flip-flops to the airport. She suggests a pair of cotton trousers and some ballet flats with traction instead.

Call it cozy couture. Ease is key, but adding a fun scarf or eye-catching jewelry can make all the difference before you run out the door to your destination. When we sit down to discuss her everyday wardrobe selections, I learn that they're not far off from her travel choices—and that no matter where you're going, there's no excuse for not arriving in style.

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: How did the concept of Passport come about?

JESSICA GOOD: I've been traveling both domestically and internationally since I was about four, so it's always been a big part of my life. When I was little, my mother used to make my sister and me dress up before getting on a plane, so I grew up with the idea that traveling is a special occasion. When I got older and was preparing to go on a trip, I found that I had to go to 10 different stores looking for the all the things I wanted. As I was developing the concept for Passport, I wanted to pull together a store that offers customers the convenience of finding all those items in one place.

But not all of the items you sell are meant for global travel, right?

Even though my focus was on travel, I realized that a lot of the accessories I found would be great for everyday life as well, such as a cool laptop case or the perfect work bag. My jet-setting friends wanted clothing for their travels that was versatile and comfortable but, above all, stylish and contemporary. I also saw that this same clothing fit the needs of busy women in their everyday lives.

How does Passport's concept reflect your personal style?

My everyday personal style is classic and comfortable with a bit of contemporary flair, which is the feeling I've created in Passport. I don't like things that are too fussy. I think it's important for women to feel comfortable in the clothes they're wearing, because if they aren't, it will show. But, of course, I also want to look good, so I make sure I include some interesting details that fit my mood at the time. I love to add a great piece of jewelry to a casual outfit like a big cocktail ring or a huge, colorful cuff bracelet paired with a cute tee and my favorite pair of jeans.

What are some must-have travel items in your suitcase?

A Love Quotes scarf: I have one in every color and they brighten up an outfit in a flash. My Foof laptop sleeve: I can just pull it out of my bag with my computer and put the whole thing through security at the airport. A perfect carry-on bag with lots of pockets is essential so I can find everything quickly. [And] a pair of big sunglasses: They can hide a lot—hello, red-eye flight!

What items are daily essentials?

My everyday must-haves: A Hayden-Harnett carry-all to hold all the odds and ends in my purse. That way I never have to search for my lip gloss! [An] umbrella because you can never be too prepared for Boston weather. My Bloch roll-up flats so I can take off my 4-inch heels and walk home from a night out in comfort! And my new iPhone: How did I live without this?

How do your outfits differ from when you work in the store, go out on the weekends and travel? And are they similar in any way?
A lot of the outfits I wear to the store are exactly what I would wear while traveling. I'm running around a lot for work, whether at the store or at designer showrooms, so I need to look great and feel comfortable. It's the same if I'm going out on the weekends. I'll wear something that can take me from work during the day right into a night out. I can never fail with a little, black jersey dress. I just throw on a jacket or cardigan and flats for work; heels and some jewelry for night[time] and I'm ready to go.

How can someone dress up a travel look and update it from just comfy pajama-looking clothes?
I think dressing simply is the best way to look put-together for travel. A tailored look with your favorite jeans, a long-sleeved tee and a coat is the perfect, easy travel style. If you're heading to a warmer destination, try a simple cotton dress, leggings and flats. Keep your color palette neutral. That way you can mix and match with the other items you bring. Throw on one piece to add some color like a great scarf or a long necklace that can double as a bracelet.

What are some of the best brands to travel in and why?
For clothing I love Rachel Pally. Her signature jersey dresses and tops hardly wrinkle and are simple enough to wear to the beach during the day, and then later with some jeweled sandals to go to dinner. Love by YaYa is my favorite for super-comfortable lounge tops and pants, but with an edge. It makes some great contemporary versions of sweats. Vince is perfect for well-tailored styles that really flatter with their refined basics. For luggage, Bric's makes an incredibly light rolling bag that holds up perfectly in the unfriendly world of luggage handlers. And Matt & Nat has the best weekenders in all-vegan materials.

Where are your favorite places to shop in Boston?
The whole Boston area is full of amazing shopping. I go to Barneys for hard-to-find designers and really unique accessory pieces. It also has the most amazing jewelry selection. Charles Street is one of my favorite shopping spots. I love Twentieth Century Ltd Goods for vintage jewelry. There's nothing you can't find there, and you know you won't see the same piece on anyone else. Good is the store for great gifts and unique things for my home. The North End also has some fabulous new shops and familiar old destinations.

Where are your favorite places to shop around the world?
When I'm in L.A. I always spend a day shopping Robertson Blvd. There are some incredible clothing boutiques and, of course, the best people watching. I lived in Ecuador for a year in college and when I was there I fell in love with the Otavalo marketplace. It's full of colorful textiles and crafts. And every time I go back, I stop there to pick up a new silver cuff bracelet or a colorful beaded necklace. In London, the food court at Harrods is a must stop. It makes me nostalgic for childhood trips to the UK. In the Caribbean, I try to visit the spice market on Grenada—the smell alone is worth it. In Spain, I love the boutiques of Madrid for style with a hint of rebellion.

What are the dos and don'ts when it comes to dressing for travel?
Just because you're traveling doesn't mean you can't look your best—you never know who you might run into. If you're getting on a plane, you'll have to do the security "strip tease." That means shoes and all outerwear (jackets, cardigans, zippered hoodies, etc.) will have to come off before you walk through the metal detector. Don't wear a jacket with 20 buttons that takes five minutes to get off. Slip-on shoes are also a must—no lace-up boots! Keep your outfit simple and easy. ✖✖✖

New and Improved

SCHOOL'S IN

AFTER YEARS OF upgrading students, the Boston Center for Adult Education has taken a dose of its own medicine. Since 1933, the school has taught courses like burlesque dancing, drawing for comic books and learning to say 'Good morning' in Arabic. Now the BCAE is leaving its digs in the Gamble Mansion on Comm. Ave. for a sleek new building: a renovated parking garage in Bay Village. The expanded amenities include a grand ballroom for larger dance ensembles, new art and music studios and two kitchens with state-of-the-art gas stoves, cutlery and built-in wine chillers.

Cooking instructor Diane Manteca gushes, "The new facilities are unbelievable. We have so much more space and now we can accommodate large groups." If the art of the sauté isn't your thing, try Rock & Roll Yoga. Who says you can't achieve enlightenment while jamming out to Pink Floyd? VERONICA BARILA

Bright Lights, Big Apple

All in the Family

Move over J.Lo, the original Bronx darling is back. Chazz Palminteri's one-man show, A Bronx Tale, is his semi-autobiographical narrative about a young man forced to choose between joining the mafia or fulfilling the dreams of his father. When Robert DeNiro caught the Broadway production in the early 1990s, he asked Palminteri to adapt it for the big screen, and a coming-of-age classic was born. A Bronx Tale plays at the Colonial Theatre through April 11. Anyone wise wouldn't fuhgeddaboutit.

Coraline ★★★ Neil Gaiman's psychologically spiky novella gets a fairly faithful rendering from gifted stop-motion animator Henry Selick, who previously tickled eyeballs with his beloved The Nightmare Before Christmas and the terrific but underrated James and the Giant Peach. Voiced without much gusto by Dakota Fanning, our title lass is a neglected only child who happens upon a secret tunnel leading to an alternate universe where doppelgängers of her distracted parents are suddenly affectionate and doting. Of course, they do have buttons for eyes, but that's probably the least creepy thing about them. A psychedelic trip down a dark rabbit hole of youthful anxieties, Coraline is never less than a visual marvel, even when Gaiman's leaps of dream-logic become more head-scratching than mind-blowing. If you have the option, I'd check out the 3-D version, which wisely foregoes the usual gimmicky gotcha effects and instead uses the wondrous Real D technology to further envelop you in Selick's richly detailed, carefully rendered world. Also, it's nice to see a heroic cat, for a change. (Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Crossing Over ★ ½ A few years back, Harrison Ford famously turned down Steven Soderbergh's offer to star in Traffic. (The role eventually went to Michael Douglas). He obviously regrets the decision, at least judging from his glum appearance in this knockoff. Attempting to apply the same multi-storyline sprawl that Soderbergh used to investigate the drug trade, Wayne Kramer's picture drones on incoherently and at great length about our modern immigration woes. With a single, constipated facial expression, Ford anchors the film as a haunted INS officer who rounds up illegals in sweatshops and hides a secret soft spot for pretty young Latinas. Across town, Ray Liotta's sleazy bureaucrat sexually exploits an aspiring Australian actress (Alice Eve) looking for a green card, while his clueless wife (Ashley Judd) begs to adopt an African orphan. Kramer is known for brash, intriguingly distasteful pictures like The Cooler and Running Scared, but Crossing Over lacks the lurid energy of those films. It's stolid, lifeless Oscar bait, as grimly one-note as Ford's performance. (In the suburbs.)

Gomorrah ★★ Matteo Garrone's pitiless expose of Italy's Neapolitan Mafia is full of despair and sobering statistics. Unlike their romanticized neighbors in Sicily's La Cosa Nostra, the Camorra has no illusions about tradition, honor or any of that Don Corleone junk. There's nothing here but money and murder. Working from a best seller by Roberto Saviano (who shares a screenwriting credit) Garrone traces this vile gang's reach through every level of society, from everyday street toughs, through haute couture sweatshops, all the way to toxic-waste dumps that poison an already dying community. But while Gomorrah is structurally impressive, it's also emotionally inert. Admirably avoiding sentimental mob movie clichés, Garrone forgets to offer anything in their place. The movie is a sociological study taken from such a jaundiced distance that there's nothing for us to latch onto. The characters are nasty, shallow people whose inevitable deaths come as a relief to the audience. Sure it's informative and well researched, but it's a grind. (At Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Gran Torino ★★★ ½ A throwback to Clint Eastwood's cheap and dirty '80s crowd-pleasers, Gran Torino looks like it was shot over the course of a long weekend and cost about $15 to make. It's also extremely entertaining. Eastwood plays a growling, bigoted Korean War vet who gradually warms to a family of Hmong immigrants living next door. As he sputters, spits and cusses his way through scenes, this mean, old dog learns a few new tricks. The movie is pitched at the same hyperbolic level as Eastwood's oversized turn. Designed as his farewell to acting, the movie plays like catnip for longtime fans. There's a valedictory air to the work, studded with explicit references to characters like Harry Callahan, Gunny Highway and Josey Wales. Like his other films, Gran Torino has some satisfying shades of moral uncertainty lurking beneath the surface. But viewers will also get a giddy thrill of seeing a 78-year-old badass pulling a gun on gangbangers and snarling, "Get off my lawn." (In the suburbs.)

He's Just Not That Into You ★★ ½ Unexpectedly tough-minded and insightful for a fair stretch of its running time, director Ken Kwapis' adaptation of Greg Behrendt and Liz Tuccillo's best-selling self-help book starts out with both feet planted firmly on the ground instead of head over heels. The film takes a dim view of the dating scene, as Ginnifer Goodwin's high-strung serial clinger

DOUBLE YOUR FUN

Clive Owen and Julia Roberts excel in deceit.

Duplicity
Starring Julia Roberts, Clive Owen, Tom Wilkinson, Tom McCarthy and Paul Giamatti. Written and directed by Tony Gilroy. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

PC4 Universal Pictures

TONY GILROY'S SOPHOMORE feature comes off so breezy and delightful in its classic Hollywood charms, you might relax into the giddy effervescence and never even realize how cynical a piece of work it truly is.

This would be a mistake.

Gilroy, who penned the Bourne trilogy and helmed Michael Clayton, is obviously one angry dude, as Duplicity is the most brazenly nihilistic studio comedy since the Coen Brothers' Burn After Reading. It's a tart piece that prides itself on staying at least two steps ahead of the audience, working a fractured timeline and upending expectations at every turn. If you're not paying strict attention from start to finish, you're going to be in serious trouble.

Clive Owen stars as MI6 sellout Ray Koval, who only recently ditched her majesty's secret service in favor of a more lucrative career stealing secret recipes for frozen pizzas. Indeed, Duplicity's grandest punch line is that all heroes eventually wind up working banal cases in the private sector. That's just where the money is.

Ray's got a bad history with former CIA agent Claire Stenwick (the shockingly great Julia Roberts), and there's a lot we see before the opening credits about a past, ill-fated New Year's Eve in Dubai that may have good cause to set poor Ray's finely chiseled teeth on edge.

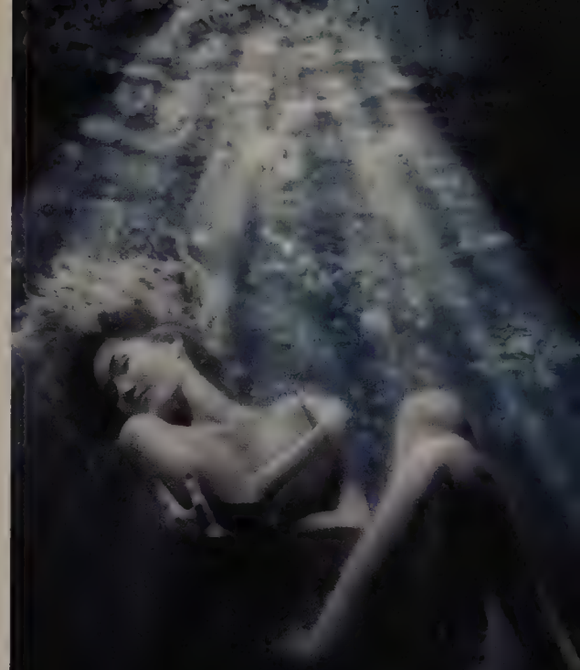
Of course, Owen was famously courted to be the new James Bond (he declined) and Roberts portrayed a Mata Hari figure in George Clooney's underrated directorial debut, Confessions of a Dangerous Mind. We're used to our movie stars playing spies, but we've never seen them as corporate cronies for multinational conglomerates.

Gilroy's film rather ingeniously eliminates any sort of real-world stakes and sets Ray and Claire working at cross-purposes for vainglorious hand-lotion CEO's played by a half-crazed Tom Wilkinson and the always-amazing Paul Giamatti. Our bickering heroes are attempting to swipe a certain top-secret formula that hasn't made it to the patent courts yet. But are they up to something else entirely?

Duplicity leapfrogs back and forth through time, and there's no way I could in good conscience give away what happens first, last or next. But these are two bona-fide, luminous movie stars, and Gilroy knows exactly how to use them. The giddiness comes from the joy he takes in his dialogue and the pure pleasure of watching heavyweights like Owen and Roberts delivering a rambling, side-winding monologue, and then batting the screwball banter back and forth. As with Clayton, Gilroy's movies feel like fun, healthful vacations for actors who tend to talk too much.

Most of Duplicity takes place indoors within closed-off, stagy sets that sometimes make it feel like the fluffy comedic sequel to Closer. It's a kick to watch the preening Owen ruffled by Roberts' brassy putdowns, and for Owen to casually toss gems like: "You spend so much time with your legs in the air, you don't even know when you're upside down."

But it all comes down to a grand, weirdly tragic tale of two people who lie for a living, and the filmmaker's ruthlessness comes through in every aspect of this floundering love story. How can you truly be with somebody after you've figured out he or she is just as full of crap as you are? If trust is the foundation of any relationship, what can you do when you're professionally required to be dishonest? A gloomy undertow builds beneath the snappy zingers, and despite all the surface chuckles, Duplicity isn't shy about confronting the steep emotional price paid by these fast-talking scam artists.



Gilroy's ambiguous final shot backs off where most romantic comedies would rather zoom in, leaving the last call up to the viewers. Personally, I like to see it as two conniving people getting exactly what they deserve: each other. ✖✖✖ learns some hard lessons from Justin Long's bartender lothario. There's a surprisingly eccentric turn from Jennifer Connelly as a suspicious housewife whose hubby (Bradley Cooper) is enjoying too many late-night yoga lessons with Scarlett Johansson. Even Ben Affleck and Jennifer Aniston are decent for a change, playing a long-term couple wondering what it really means to be married. How infuriating then to watch the last half hour undercut the previous 90 minutes of bitter truths. Shoehorning these characters into one sappy Hollywood ending after another and selling itself short for chick-flick clichés, He's Just Not That Into You cops out and decides that he really is. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The International ★★ ½ At least Tom Tykwer's expertly crafted piece of ridiculous hokum has timing on its side. What's more apt for our current financial times than a thriller in which the villain is a bank? A smoldering Clive Owen gives his all as an Interpol agent hard on the heels of the dastardly International Bank of Business and Credit. Logic is in short supply, as we're repeatedly informed that this sinister organization has infiltrated and corrupted every level of government in every country around the world, but somehow its financial future seems to hinge on a small-potatoes arms deal with a tinhorn third-world dictator. But it's hard to care about coherence when you can sit back and marvel at Tykwer's bravura set-pieces. The German-born director of Run Lola Run has a knack for kinetic energy. The International's centerpiece sequence is a 14-minute cat-and-mouse scene in the Guggenheim Museum that explodes into the best shootout since Michael Mann's Heat. (At Boston Common, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Knowing ★ M. Night Shyamalan doesn't have to feel so ashamed anymore. Dopey even by the relaxed standards of Nicolas Cage movies, Alex Proyas' dunderheaded doomsday tale casts the over-actor as a grieving MIT professor prone to hysteria and fits of atheistic petulance. This presents a problem when his young son happens upon a 50-year-old piece of notebook paper containing numerical codes for every man-made or natural disaster from the past five decades, which leaves the boozed-up Dr. Nic to unlock the exact time and place of the impending apocalypse. Around the margins are a bunch of blond guys in trench coats looking like refugees from the 80s' band Wang Chung and attempting to abduct children for mysterious purposes. Knowing is ridiculous and offensive, smuggling a fear-mongering religious agenda into multiplexes beneath a veneer of CGI effects and disaster porn. Cage's comical caterwauling can only distract for so long, and the film eventually feels like the big-budget version of one of Kirk Cameron's Left Behind movies. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Monsters Vs. Aliens ★★★ Like a snarky little offshoot of Pixar's crew of bona fide artistes, DreamWorks Animation tends to specialize in pop-culture references and dated inside jokes aimed at the long-suffering parents in the audience. Its latest endeavor will never be confused with Wall-E, but at least it's a cohesive piece that boasts a charmingly 50s' retro sensibility and some dazzling 3-D effects. Reese Witherspoon voices an unlucky bride struck by a meteorite, now horrified to find herself growing seven stories tall and quarantined in a secret government facility with a bunch of icky monsters. Once aliens attack, these outcasts become America's last line of defense. There's some very funny voice work by Hugh Laurie as the world's smartest cockroach, while Seth Rogen is typecast as an amorphous, dimwitted blob. As was bound to happen sooner or later, Stephen Colbert plays the president. I recommend the IMAX 3-D presentation, which distracts from any screenwriting weaknesses with a healthy dose of eye candy. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Pink Panther 2 ★ ½ Steve Martin's recent memoir, Born Standing Up, was one of the sharpest and most insightful books ever written about the art of comedy. So it's anything but funny to see that Martin's follow-up act is a coscreenplay credit on this moldering pile of worn-out gags and goofy accent jokes. Martin once again makes a mockery of Peter Sellers' iconic Inspector Clouseau, substituting the precise slapstick of those early Blake Edwards films with stumblebum pratfalls and an untoward amount of shouting. The convoluted caper finds Clouseau assigned to a "dream team" of international detectives, which unfortunately means we're stuck watching Andy Garcia, Alfred Molina and Yuki Matsuzaki play up some seriously tacky ethnic stereotypes. Martin's Inspector is inconsistent from scene to scene. His competency varies according to the needs of the plot, and an ill-advised subplot in which he's required to take political correctness from Lily Tomlin steals shamelessly from Borat. Martin should be ashamed. (In the suburbs.)

Slumdog Millionaire ★★★ ½ This blast of filmmaking exuberance from Trainspotting director Danny Boyle offers the year's catchiest gimmick. Jamal (Dev Patel) is an uneducated orphan from the slums who finds himself an unlikely contestant on India's version of Who Wants to Be a Millionaire. As luck would have it, every question serendipitously unlocks another flashback chapter in his wild, picaresque biography. With such a structure, The Full Monty writer Simon Beaufoy's screenplay can't help but err on the schematic side. But it's a thrilling experience nonetheless, thanks to Boyle's verve and commitment to sensory overload. Jamal's saga is Dickens by way of Bollywood with a touch of fairy-tale magic. As the valiant young hero rockets from one dangerous scrape to another, even the ghastliest images of poverty are emboldened and energized with vibrant Technicolor hues. Will Jamal rescue his childhood sweetheart from the Fagin-like local crime lord? Can he win the 20-million-rupee jackpot? As the answers unfold, cinematographer Antony Dod Mantle cranks up the colors while Boyle blasts the bouncy music cues, all to thrilling effect. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in suburbs.)

Sunshine Cleaning ★★ Misleadingly sold as a wacky romp from the people who brought you Little Miss Sunshine, director Christine Jeffs' latest is a muted, melancholy affair with strong performances from Amy Adams and Emily Blunt. The two play depressingly dysfunctional sisters who start their own crime-scene cleanup business as a way to stave off poverty. At least for a little while, the movie boasts a plainspoken sadness and a poignant sense of day-to-day drudgery. But first-timer Megan Holley's screenplay isn't content to leave well enough alone, piling on predictable late-movie revelations and a rash of melodramatic contrivances that only serve to undercut the acting. The great Alan Arkin phones this one in by recycling his goofy grandpa shtick to diminishing returns. He belongs in a different movie, one that's taking place hundreds of miles away from Adams' sorrowful smile. Sunshine Cleaning's patently false, upbeat ending feels not just like a cheat, but a betrayal. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Lacey Terrell

Blunt Force Drama

Strong performances from Amy Adams and Emily Blunt can't salvage Sunshine Cleaning.

Taken ★★ ½ Here's another slick, lurid thriller from writer/producer Luc Besson in which the French director employs his trademark blend of brutal action sequences and mawkish sentimentality. It's a tricky mix that Besson got just right in 1994's The Professional, but he's found diminishing returns ever since. Liam Neeson stars as a retired CIA assassin turned overprotective dad. He blanches at his precious teenage daughter's wishes to follow U2 across Europe, and it turns out father really does knows best, because young Kim (Maggie Grace) has barely stepped off the plane in Paris when she's kidnapped by snarling Albanian sex traffickers. What follows is a brisk procession of ass-whoopings, with towering, tree-trunk Neeson snapping limbs and tossing corpses all along the Seine. It's completely preposterous and more than a little stupid, but director Pierre Morel knows his way around a fight sequence, and his burly leading man injects a surprising gravitas to a one-note, Jack Bauer knockoff. Neeson's early monologue, threatening his daughter's kidnappers, is itself almost worth the price of admission. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Two Lovers ★★★ ½ Awash in romantic ambivalence and pained, inarticulated yearning, director James Gray's roiling melodrama should probably be considered ridiculous. While I concede that the film is fairly absurd and overwrought, I also found it impossible not to be swept up in its gonzo sincerity, tickled by the eccentric humor and dazzled by Gray's lush stretches of cinematic elegance. Joaquin Phoenix stars as a heartsick, bumbling mess who recently reclaimed his childhood bedroom in his parents' insular Brighton Beach neighborhood. He quickly finds himself courted by Vinessa Shaw's nurturing model of stability, but also pulled by the allure of Gwyneth Paltrow's druggy, shiksa basket case. Boasting a bold, go-for-broke performance by Phoenix and some uncharacteristically rough-edged work from Paltrow, the operatic Two Lovers allows its performers to conjure the heedless rush of true romance, while Gray's directorial rigor keeps the proceedings detached and clear-eyed enough to question whether their ardor is the effect of immature delusion. (At Waltham Embassy.)

Waltz With Bashir ★★ ½ Sifting through long-buried memories of Israel's 1982 Lebanon war, Ari Folman's autobiographical documentary tells a story from so many standpoints and with such lack of affect that the movie remains elusive. The animation style is both striking and off-putting. It resembles the rotoscoping used in Waking Life and Chicago 10, but Waltz was created with a mix of Flash, 3-D and traditional animation techniques, so certain scenes look more like a Web site than a movie. Some events are dramatized while others are simply recited straight into the camera. The surreal combat scenes are memorable and harrowing, but Folman's use of repressed memory syndrome as a cliffhanger device feels phony and cheapens the material with Hollywood conventions. The aloof, distant quality of the film gnaws at you, and not even a final flourish of sickening, real-life photography can bridge the gap. In Hebrew with English subtitles. (In the suburbs.)

Watchmen ★★ ½ A landmark 12-volume doorstop written by Alan Moore, Watchmen is something like the Finnegan's Wake of superhero comics. Filmmakers like Terry Gilliam, Darren Aronofsky and Paul Greengrass have all tried and failed to adapt it over the years, leaving 300 director Zack Snyder stuck wrestling Watchmen's meaty monologues and massive backstory into a crowd-pleasing blockbuster entertainment. He gets about halfway there. Set in an alternate 1985, in which Nixon is serving his fifth term and the Cold War is heating up, the tangled tale finds a long-dormant band of caped crusaders spurred back into action by the murder of one of their own. The screenplay is undone by the stubborn density of the source material as it takes the film over an hour just to establish the players and their histories before the story can even get started. I doubt it will even make any sense to anyone who hasn't read the comic. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Wrestler ★★★★ The movie is shrewd enough to use Mickey Rourke's decimated visage to its advantage. Hell, it's practically a monument to his personal ruin. Rourke's washed-up wrestler, Randy "The Ram," is a teetering wreck who doesn't stand a chance of recapturing his former glory, and every close-up hammers that point home. Faced with a health crisis, he makes a few efforts. He reaches out to a sympathetic stripper (well played by Marisa Tomei) who similarly finds herself growing too old for her profession. He briefly attempts to reconnect with his estranged daughter (Evan Rachel Wood), but all the damage he inflicted in the past can't be easily undone. The Wrestler doesn't offer much in the way of easy answers or pat solutions, it simply asks that we spend a little time with these people and live inside their world for a spell. Here, at last, is a true sequel to the original Rocky, full of quiet desperation, squalid backdrops and earthy humor. (At Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

TRANSITIONS

Vienna Teng thinks outside the cubicle as a folk-pop pianist.

Vienna Teng plays the Somerville Theatre on April 7.

SCREAMING CHILDREN CAN be heard in the background when Vienna Teng calls from an auditorium in Germany where she is scheduled to play that night. "It's sort of a day-care center being transitioned into a concert venue," the singer/pianist explains. "There are these kids rollerblading around the floor where the seats are going to be, and there's a science experiment that involves growing very tall plants in another corner, and there's something that involves hoisting crates up high and dropping them."

Teng knows how to negotiate extreme transitions. She began piano lessons at age 5 and adopted Vienna Teng as a stage persona at 12 when she decided the name Cynthia Shih didn't cut it. She mixed college-dorm gigs with computer-science studies at Stanford and took a job as a software engineer for Cisco Systems. Then she quit to focus on music, ending up on The Late Show With David Letterman within months.

"I was 23 when I left Cisco, and, at the time, it didn't seem like that big a deal," says Teng, now 30. "When you're young and you don't have a family and a mortgage, you say 'I've always wanted to do this. What do I have to lose?'"

The California native had inked her first record deal with Boston indie label Virt and knew that she lacked the Cisco vacation days to devote more energy to her music. "Quitting my job was this exhilarating, frightening thing," she says. "Then came the more frightening process of getting up every morning and not having a job and not having a music career yet—and trying to figure out how to make one happen!"

Initial exposure on Letterman didn't hurt. On April 7, Teng releases Inland Territory, her fourth CD and second for the Zoë/Rounder label, before headlining the Somerville Theatre that night. The music thing appears to be working out.

"I'd dreamt about it from such an early age, which is why I came up with the name Vienna," Teng says, adding that she chose the city because it was home to the great classical composers (whereas Teng simply looked and sounded better than Shih). "But it took a lot for me to decide that it was more than a dream and it was worth pursuing—just because I'd grown up in this world where it was such a foreign idea to do anything other than pursue a professional career."

> "There was a lot of presumption in these songs. It was just what I was fascinated with."

That's made clear in the new CD's "The Grandmother Song," which shows that Teng's parents weren't alone in feeling trepidation over music as a career path. To understand her grandmother's perspective, Teng spoke to her parents, "to hear more about their history, about what it was like for them growing up, and why they immigrated to the U.S. rather than staying in Taiwan. Then it made a lot more sense."

That song is set to a rustic gospel stomp, a nod to Teng's homeland as a Chinese-American and a stark departure from the light Tori Amos/Sarah McLachlan–styled chamber folk of Inland Territory's opening songs. In turn, the second half of the album strives for more textural grandeur in tracks like "St. Stephen's Cross" and the propulsive "Augustine."

Teng also branches into far-flung lyrical personas in the border-crossing tale "No Gringo," "Radio" (which imagines urban warfare at home) and the klezmer-flavored "In Another Life," where she sings about mining coal in West Virginia, marching on Tiananmen Square or being married at age 13.

"There was a lot of presumption in these songs," Teng says. "It was just what I was fascinated with and wanted to write about, and I tried to be as respectful as I could."

She also embraces the challenge of performing the disc's more rhythmic and textural tunes onstage with producer Alex Wong on drums, guitar and vocals, and Ward Williams (ex–Jump Little Children) on cello and electric guitar.

"I'm most comfortable playing in small configurations because you can retain some intimacy both with the audience and the other musicians," Teng says. "It's a lot of fun to take songs that you've conceived one way in the studio and dress them in completely different clothes."

It may be that Teng will change her career clothes again down the road. "I'm trying to look out on the horizon and figure out what the next 10 years look like," she says, citing interests in social entrepreneurship and economics. However, she also might ease into songwriting for theater. "It would be a good way to switch into a next phase." ✖✖✖

Case Study

Neko Candy A former member of the infamous indie-rock supergroup the New Pornographers, Neko Case has spent the past few years shying away from her X-rated past. The alt-country songstress, known for her unmistakable, powerful voice and brilliant songwriting, recently released Middle Cyclone—her third solo record. In the album, Case reaffirms her unique take on music with unusually structured songs that defy the popular verse/chorus/verse format. Middle Cyclone promises to sweep fans off their feet with nature-inspired themes and collaborations with M. Ward and Calexico. Neko Case brings her act to the Berklee Performance Center on April 11. Thais Collins

The Art of War

Frenemies Thought your college rivalry was bad? Although inspired by each other, 16th-century painters Titian, Tintoretto and Veronese were also fiercely critical of their peers. Put yourself in the middle of the quarrel with Titian, Tintoretto, Veronese: Rivals in Renaissance Venice at the MFA through Aug. 16. Curators at the museum discovered through X-rays that Tintoretto even painted over an earlier work—perhaps a last-minute move to beat the competition. Amanda Fakhreddine

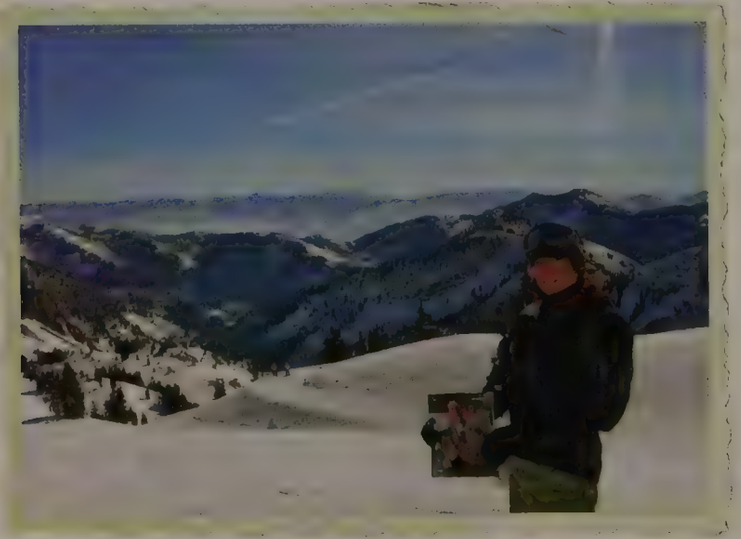
ATTENTION BOUNTY HUNTERS! A FREE PORSCHE TO ANYONE WHO CAPTURES AN IMPROPER READER AT THE FESTIVAL OF THE SUPERMODEL SHERPAS HELD APRIL 1, ON THE SUMMIT OF MOUNT EVEREST



Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip. Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.

Chrissie Lane, Gretchen Folk and Danielle Morin traveled to Tulum, Mexico, on a government-commissioned trip to discover new methods of removing water from the human ear.

Carl and Margot Lenhart flaunted their Celtic pride outside the Staples Center in Los Angeles, Calif. Magic's pointing to all the Lakers fans showing up 30 minutes late to the game.

Karen Gutierrez brought us out to the slopes of Snowbird in Salt Lake City, Utah. The skiing was great, except for that little kid who kept pestering us for his two dollars.

Massachusetts congresswoman Niki Tsongas was tsweet enough to crack us a little tsmile while she tstood with our winter tsports issue.

FUGAKYU [1280 Beacon Street (Coolidge Corner), Brookline, MA 02446, 617-734-1268. www.fugakyu.net] Authentic Japanese cuisine in an elegant and serene setting. Open Daily for lunch and dinner, Fugakyu's menu consists of traditional and nouveau Japanese cuisine including sushi, sashimi, tempura and an extensive sake list. Fugakyu is the largest Japanese restaurant in New England. It's two floors include a sushi bar, cocktail bar, common dining areas, bamboo-enclosed booths, screened Tatami rooms and several private function rooms. Reservations for parties of all sizes are accepted. Takeout and delivery available.

HARU [55 Huntington Ave., Boston, 617-536-0770. www.harusushi.com] Haru is a modern Japanese restaurant group known for its ample portions and striking designs. Located street level below the Shops at Prudential Center, Haru serves inventive Japanese cuisine ranging from sushi, sashimi and creative salads to signature dishes like ceviches, tartares, filet mignon and specialty rolls. The 6,100 sq. ft. space boasts a striking private dining room, elegant sushi bar, and lively bar and lounge scene perfect for people-watching. Catering and delivery also available.

L'ANDANA [86 Cambridge Street, Burlington, 781-270-0100. www.landanagrill.com] L'Andana will transport you to the foothills of Tuscany. The restaurant spins the rustic look of an old world farmhouse into a modern interpretation of the faraway countryside. Chef Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Robert Jean work together to create cuisine that is equally fresh, authentic and contemporary Italian as well as featuring a selection of items from a wood grill. Full bar, extensive wine list, complimentary valet parking, and a striking private dining room are welcome amenities. Dinner Sunday-Saturday.

MASA RESTAURANT [439 Tremont Street, Boston, 617-338-8884 and 350 Cambridge Road, Woburn, 781-938-8886. www.masarestaurant.com] Masa's two locations offer an award winning menu, pairing flavors of the Southwest with local ingredients. Our $1 tapas in the bar and brunch and dinner menu feature great food at reasonable prices. Masa Woburn is open for lunch while Masa Boston has added our Picaditas, featuring small plates such as Green Chile Cheeseburgers. Our dining areas are the ideal spot to celebrate any occasion for any size group.

MATCH [94 Massachusetts Ave., at Newbury Street, Boston, 617-247-9922] This modern restaurant/ lounge maintains an unpretentious yet hip vibe. A sleek fire display and glass wine room are just two of its many features. Match's signature mini burgers and martinis are guaranteed to please the most discriminating palate. Match music has a distinct early evening lounge feel with the beat and volume picking up as the night progresses. Open daily 5 p.m.-1 a.m. AE, DC, MC,V.

MAX AND DYLANS [15 West Street, Downtown Crossing, Boston, 617-423-3600; 1 Chelsea Street, City Square, Charlestown, 617-242-7400. www.maxanddylans.com] Max and Dylans is a hip, trendy, casual and approachable local restaurant featuring appetizers, flatbreads, sandwiches and entrees. Cool and vibrant cocktails and hip, current music will add to the flare. Large, seductive black and white photographs decorate the restaurant. The menu is priced for value and makes it a great meeting place for groups or just a few friends. The City Square location has a private dining room that can hold functions of up to 100.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300. www.mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

ROGGIE'S NEW AGE BREW & GRILLE [356 Chestnut Hill Avenue, Cleveland Circle, Brighton, 617-566-1880. www.roggies.com] This all time favorite restaurant and bar has over 52 beers on tap. Come enjoy breakfast all day, lunch, and dinner. Extensive menu ranging from sandwiches, ribs, pizza, to pasta. Catering also available as well as party platters, call 617-713-0555.

SCOLLAY SQUARE [21 Beacon Street, Boston, 617-742-4900. www.scollaysquare.com] Scollay Square is warm and inviting, featuring American comfort food and a sophisticated cocktail list at reasonable prices. A neighborhood bistro-style restaurant, we are a great meeting place for friends to eat, drink and socialize. New chef Jason Stump creates mouth watering daily specials, just introduced for the 2009 season. The menu also features a 3 course menu, served nightly, for $22.00. Join us weekdays for lunch, all week for dinner and Sundays for brunch and our famous "Make Your Own Bloody Mary Bar".

SORELLINA [One Huntington Avenue, Boston, 617-412-4600. www.sorellinaboston.com] Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Robert Jean prepare contemporary regional Italian/Mediterranean food in this sophisticated setting in Copley Square. Matching the creative cuisine is a warm-modern design highlighted by a glowing mural and expansive floor-to-ceiling windows. Settle into soft leather upholstery and enjoy the finely-crafted room that's welcoming, comfortable and elegant. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TAVERN ON THE WATER [Pier 6, Charlestown Navy Yard, 617-242-8040. www.tavernonthewater.com] Tavern on the Water is known for its summer days but is open year round. It has free parking all winter long; the view is the same and features special menu items during the winter months. Yes they even have tablecloths and all glassware during the winter. How about a bottle of Cakebread Chard for only $$65.00? When the warm weather hits it is the place to be with its outside 200 seat patio facing the Boston skyline.

TEATRO [177 Tremont Street, Boston, 617-778-6841. www.teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Executive Chef Robert Jean's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call -- a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

GOOD FUR AND FUN BAGS

The Emperor's New Clothes

They say politics makes for strange bedfellows.

Now that we have our first black president, the NAACP has joined forces with the Friars Club to determine an acceptable way for upstanding citizens to make Obama jokes without seeming racist.

To raise funds for the effort, they cohosted an evening at the Comedy Connection that attracted the likes of politico Billy Bulger, banking bigwigs Carol and Bernie Fulp, stand-up veterans Lenny Clarke and Steve Sweeney, and talk show host John Dennis (who caused quite a stir a few years back by comparing the gorilla who escaped from the Franklin Park Zoo to a Metco student).

The evening's headliners included right-wing shrew Ann Coulter and left-wing blabbermouth Bill Maher, whose jokes generally fell flat. Thank God for The Daily Show host Jon Stewart, who said he's had himself declared legally color-blind and added, "Obama's easy to make fun of. It's the Dumbo ears." A lawsuit from Disney is pending.

Man Bites Dog

Now that it's in poor taste to flaunt one's wealth by wearing mink, chinchilla, sable and other expensive furs, some of Boston's biggest socialites turned out at the Copley Plaza for a black-tie gala cohosted by PETA and the MSPCA.

The Pelt-a-Thon, a benefit to raise furs and funds for a unique program that gives injured animals skin grafts made from cast-off fur coats, included a cruelty-free fashion show and a special guest appearance by actor Richard Gere, who said, "These animals need all the affection we can give them," while petting a hamster lovingly.

On hand for the event were such comme il faut types as social activist and citizen of the world Doris Yaffe, kabuki socialite Marilyn Riseman, bundle of loveliness Jessica Gifford, elfin celebrity Ashley Olsen, token male Gene Goldman (accompanied by his bulldog, Coco Crisp), real-life Red Sox David Ortiz and his wife, Tiffany, Brookline doyenne Rosalie Cohen and dozens of others who donated their furs to the cause.

Tugging at everyone's heartstrings was a standard poodle who had suffered a serious bout of the mange but received a fur transplant that allowed her to be groomed in the traditional way, prompting one jaded attendee to mutter, "God! Sheared mink is sooooo 1999."

Meanwhile, overheard at the coat check, one guest said, "So the bad economy turns out to be good for PETA and the MSPCA," to which another muttered, "Not if people are forced to eat cats and dogs."

How Much Are Those D-Cups in the Window?

In these shaky times, it's worrisome to think that any little girl who eventually wants breast augmentation surgery might not be able to get it, which is why a group of high-profile types got together to host the first annual Tits for Tots benefit at the Mandarin Oriental.

Spearheaded by amply endowed Beacon Hill chatelaine Joan Jolley, the event raised money to insure that any female infant enrolled in the program will have the means to get a boob job when the time comes. The gathering attracted such yummy mummies as Molly Dunne, Jennifer Donaldson, Peg Rusconi,

> "Obama's easy to make fun of. It's the Dumbo ears."

Courtney Forrester, Maggie Gold Seelig, Rachel Goldfarb, Sukey Forbes Bigham, Lori Sidman, Wendy Pierce, Randi Cutler and a prominent (although recently disgraced) portfolio manager, who said, "If I'd had this chest in my '20s, I would've been able to cash out before the crash."

Following a delicious lunch (washed down with a not-half-bad Sancerre), there was a live auction that featured such items as a shopping spree at La Perla and a year's worth of Restylane. The cleverest touch: On the way out the door, guests were handed party favors labeled "fun bags."

Oh, and by the way... April Fools'! ×××

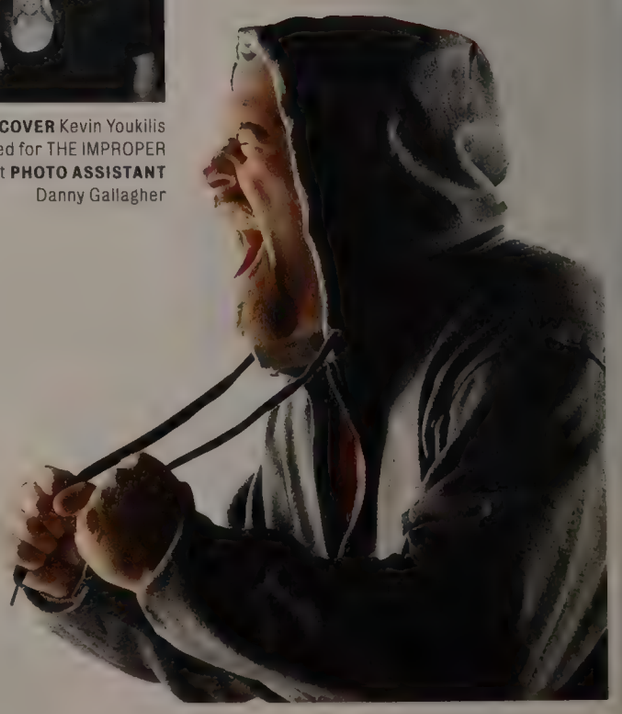
Vulgar and Ignorant

The only home furnishing I ever wanted was a huge, stuffed boar's head I saw in the window of a Lithuanian taxidermist. I fell in love with its mad, glassy eyes, its six-inch tusks and the threatening weight of its jowls. It was perfect for my kitchen nook. But instead of buying the head immediately, I did the responsible thing and toddled off to some vodka bar. When I passed by the store the next day, a troop of Swedes was strapping it onto the roof of a Volkswagen. I never saw the dead boar again.

The moral: I have atrocious taste. My wife, thank God, doesn't listen to anything I say about home decorating, because if she did, we'd live like Huns. Everything would be damp and horsy, with maybe a strategic beer fridge or dung fire here and there. But civilized furnishings have their drawbacks, too.



A wise man knows that the devil is neither in Georgia nor in the details. He's in the assembly instructions for an Ikea dresser.

A wise man also admits his ignorance. Baseball, as far as I know, is an ancient Polynesian game, originally played with coconuts and human femurs. Good thing we've got Rich Levine, Ezra Dyer and Michael Holley.

ART AND SOUL

DIANE PAULUS IS GOING TO make a splash in the respected but relatively conventional world of Boston theater. Appointed as artistic director of the American Repertory Theatre in Cambridge last spring, Paulus just announced her inaugural season lineup. Her choices either will raise eyebrows or expectations, depending on how invested you are in the status quo. "The A.R.T. has always had an impeccable reputation for artistic quality," she says. "What the organization needed to focus was on audience. I'm a real populist. I crave for theater to be part of [mainstream] culture again, not just theater for theater people."

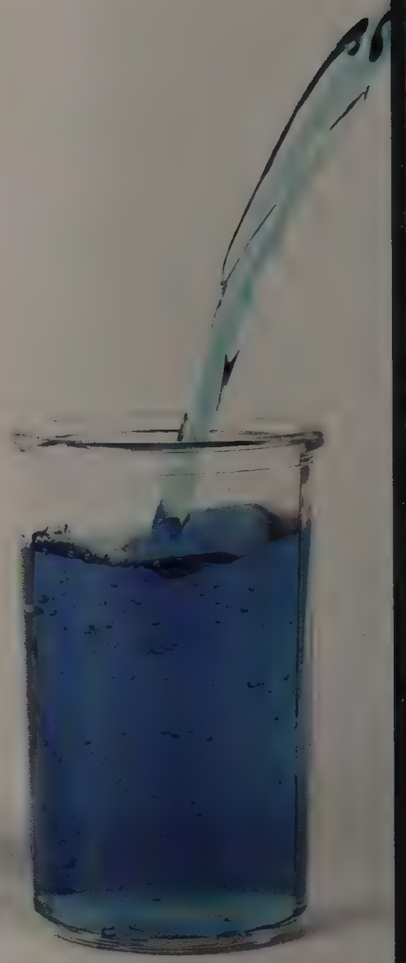
Her planned Shakespeare Exploded festival, for instance, includes The Donkey Show, a disco adaptation of A Midsummer Night's Dream created by Paulus, 42, and her husband, playwright Randy Weiner. The musical features a fully-stocked bar for the audience's enjoyment. "This is you drinking, your cocktail in hand as you're dancing, as you're watching the show," she beams.

Paulus is steeped enough in the stage to know how to upend it. As a little girl, she danced with the New York City Ballet under the great George Balanchine. As a Harvard undergraduate, A.R.T. performances shaped her perception of drama. Since then, she's won two Obie awards, a top honor for Off Broadway directors.

The A.R.T.'s new season begins in August. Before then, Paulus needs to oversee another project: moving her family to Boston. For the past year, she's been shuttling between here and New York. Prior to that, she was working in London. It's time to settle down, she says. "It would be nice to be in one place for six months." JOHN DYER

Drink of the Moment

Paging Dr. Bukowski



Nights beginning with Jell-O shots often make for miserable mornings—or early afternoons. The risk grows when the jigglers are followed by a road race and Miller High Lifes in both the 12- and 40-ounce varieties. Each overindulgence ratchets the tightrope up another story, making the inevitable fall that much more painful. If you have work the next day, you might as well use a bed of spikes as a landing pad. This is the perfect storm I weathered in the name of science.

I was testing Code Blue, a beverage invented by three local grads with experience in fields where the drinks tend to flow: Michael Sachs, a former marketing manager for Grey Goose, and nightlife event promoters Steven and Jeff Frumin. Their circles aren't filled with morning people, and as Sachs puts it, "My friends were taking advantage of the fun I was having, and we all needed something to help us get up at 8 am."

Available next month, Code Blue touts itself as "the world's first complete recovery drink." The claim stems from a formula that combines common sports drink ingredients with antioxidants and trendy "nutraceutical" items like prickly pear juice.

With a massive dose of electrolytes, it tastes like Gatorade, only thicker. It's a flavor I found not unpleasant whilst buzzed. And one morning-after, I lustily chugged it like a life-saving antidote (although my only troubling ailment was dry mouth). I felt good in relation to my Faustian efforts, but the skeptic in me chalked it up to luck, one of those evenings when your metabolism regains its collegiate form. So I tried it the next weekend, on a night when I planned on responsibility but ended up sleeping on the couch. Two bottles seemed to hydrate my cranium, relieving that burn that feels like someone left your brain out in the sun to dry. At least psychosomatically, Code Blue helps, and in the war against hangovers, even small victories should be celebrated. Preferably with a drink. NICK ALTSCHULLER

Good Eats

Eat Your Greens

Just as it only takes a patch of crocuses for people to retire their thick wool turtlenecks and heavy-tread boots, Jody Adams turned the clock forward when the first good bunch of asparagus hit her kitchen. Poof! Gone were game ragouts and cold-weather root vegetables to make way for all-things spring. Of her latest concoctions, we're particularly sprung on her springified lasagna. From the bottom up, béchamel-bound mozzarella and Parmesan, lemony braised endive and pistachios, and poppy green peas and morels are layered between sheets of semolina pasta so feathery, their delicate edges curl like vintage paper. ELIZABETH BOMZE

ASK THE EXPERT

WHAT CAN A TENANT DO IF HIS LANDLORD IS TOO CHEAP TO FIX THINGS?

DAVID A. MARSOCCI PARTNER AT THE LAW FIRM OF DOLAN CONNLY, PC

Firstly, the tenant should make the request [for repairs] in writing, as it may be necessary to prove that the landlord was actually given notice. Secondly, the tenant can threaten to withhold rent unless or until the repairs are completed. Thirdly, the tenant can contact the Inspectional Services Department and request the city begin enforcement proceedings. And fourthly, the tenant can bring his or her own action to seek damages. It is important to remember that the landlord cannot barter or bargain away his obligation under the applicable law and cannot simply lower the rent in lieu of making repairs. It is unfortunate that in difficult economic times, a landlord's responsibility to his tenant may sometimes be one of the "expenses" that is allowed to slip. If you have any questions about your rights, you should consult an attorney prior to making any decision. THAIS COLLINS

HAUTE CUISINE, SHORT ORDER

Just a week into the enterprise, the Teele Square Café already possesses the key element of being a neighborhood place: old men who just want to talk.

During a midday lull, chef and owner Jonathan Adelson chats with two seniors, his body radiating the potential energy of a man who sees a full day still ahead. They talk about his job, his garden and his hens before Adelson spots a chance. "Alright, guys. I gotta get back to work." And then the conversation continues for another five minutes.

You've got to take care of your regulars, a truth for both local hangouts and the gourmet arenas where Adelson got his start. But after stints at places like Lumière and Torch and a three-year stint as executive chef at Aquitaine, Adelson needed a change. "I just felt that fine dining wasn't accessible to everyone," he explains. "In the cafe atmosphere you can't do the fancy stuff, but you can give it the same care and preparation."

So after seven years as owner of East Cambridge's 2nd St. Cafe, the 41-year-old took a year off to help raise his first child. "In this lifestyle you don't get a lot of time, so I wanted to take some with her." With his latest venture, Adelson aims to use the techniques he's learned in the past.

"I'm really into from-the-source cooking, from start to finish," Adelson spells out. "In the summer, I'll be going to farmers' markets and getting stuff from my own garden. And anything we can make here, we do." That list not only includes stock for soups like Caribbean fish chowder ($3.95, small; $5.25, large) and house-roasted pork butts for Cubanos ($6.95), but also house-made pickles and flavored syrups for the coffee. "I don't want to just sling out food to people. I really want to take care." It's the details new customers will appreciate and valued regulars can take a little longer to savor.

SKIN DEEP

TO THE WOMAN WHO COMPLAINED about the elderly naked woman in her gym dressing room in the April 1 issue: Etiquette? If you really want to talk etiquette, I think you should refrain from referring to another person's "sagging body." Listen lady, the only perverse thing going on here is your prudish nature. A dressing room is for changing—without being criticized. The American perversion of the human body, a work of art in every form and stage of life, is shocking. Stop trying to cover it up as something shameful or raunchy. How can we ever have confidence in ourselves if society tells us that the most natural of all things (nudity) is unacceptable? I find it incredibly unbelievable that anyone would have the audacity to tell someone they can't change in a locker room, let alone criticize their body. Get a life.

And shame on The Improper for printing it. I know, it was nicely written and you have to entertain readers, but really! Please at least print my response so that we get two sides on this tale. And no, I'm not the woman from the dressing room. I'm just a regular reader who was pretty annoyed.

Disgusted

To the pedestrian not paying attention on March 22:

You were crossing Clarendon Street at the intersection with Tremont Street, not looking and oblivious to the green light. When you awoke from your dream world, you saw my car approaching. You panicked, jumping on to the sidewalk. Afterwards, you approached my parked car and accused me of almost hitting you, despite my assurances that I not only wouldn't have hit you, but that I did see you and there was plenty of space between us. In the future, you might want to pay attention and learn to cross the street safely. Yes, when you are in a crosswalk you have the right of way. But it still behooves you to practice self-preservation and common sense rather than wrapping yourself in the self-righteous delusion that the world is responsible for your safety.

Obviously fed up with the oblivious

To Ben, the newest bundle of squish in the South End:

You were born last Sunday, and I want to take this time to welcome you into the world. With your chubby little cheeks and beautiful full lips, I can already tell that you're going to drive all the girls wild. I hope that you enjoy everything that this world has to offer. And no matter where life takes you, remember that you'll always be a Bostonian at heart!

Love, V

To the guy outside Cafe 47:

It was Monday morning and the gray, wet weather mirrored my mood. I was clearly exhausted and was trudging my way to work at around 8:45 am. I thought you were just catcalling and I gave you a pretty nasty glare, but you responded with a smile and told me, "Hey, it's OK! Just smile and your day will get better." I laughed, said thanks and continued walking. You made me smile for the rest of my walk to work, and for the rest of the day.

Perfection has its price.

Of course it tastes better than other beers. We've had over 600 years to get the recipe right. Our esteemed brewery has been producing beer in Leuven since 1366. Which means we've been around a bit longer than most. Mind you, over the years our beer has witnessed the odd change or two. For instance, our customers no longer drink it to ward off the Plague, as they used to in medieval times. However, one thing has stayed the same after all these years. Stella Artois is still painstakingly brewed in a time-honored tradition with the choicest ingredients. Which is why our customers have kept coming back for more, even after 600 years.

Always enjoy responsibly. stellaartois.com

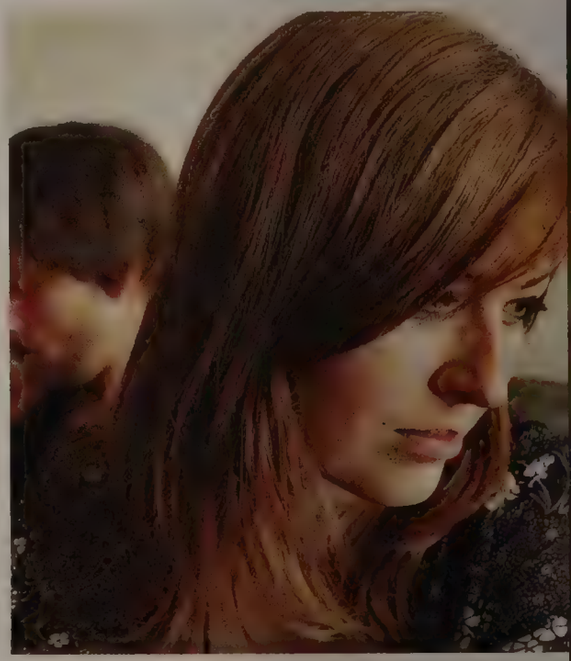
WHAT YOU DON'T KNOW CAN HURT

Harmful secrets bubble underneath a seemingly happy marriage.



THE BEGINNING is so frightening, the page seems to swerve like a car out of control in the dark. We're meeting Nora and crazy Eddie. He's older. She's 17. They're in a bar, and Eddie winds up smashing in some drunk's head.

The next chapter moves us crisply to a very different Nora, now grown-up, with teenage kids and married to Ken, who runs a family newspaper. There are office and family politics, but what we mostly see is Nora as a sensitive mother, loving wife and upright participant in charities. Eventually Ken grumbles forth his guilty secret: He's been having an affair with their friend Robin for four years. Morris brilliantly shows us the raw and raging Nora as she absorbs this unwelcome news and its painful effects on their kids. There's also a comical portrait of Nora's now-ex-friend Robin as a naive ditz. Meanwhile, secret No. 2—Nora's sordid, dangerous night with Eddie long ago—bubbles underneath. Of course, skeevy, sketchy, scary Eddie eventually returns, insinuating himself into the lives of Nora, Ken and Robin. This weird stranger's history and schemes are mysterious to Ken. The unraveling that ensues is as heart-pounding as the first scene. ✖✖✖

When it comes to ripening cheese, the Wasik family likens their philosophy to growing the perfect tomato: You can munch on (or fry) young, green specimens or slow-simmer overripe orbs, but nothing compares to a blushing late-August stunner. Case in point, every wedge and wheel that comes through their door is sniffed, squeezed, prodded and plugged; immature fromages sojourn in their 3000-cubic-foot basement cellar. Steve Wasik set the standard 30 years ago when he bought the quaint Wellesley space, and his sons Brian and Brad continue the tradition. Try their personal favorites like fourme d'ambert (a Medieval-era French blue) and Ascutney Mountain from Vermont-based Cobb Hill Farm with their house chutneys and crackers. ELIZABETH BOMZE

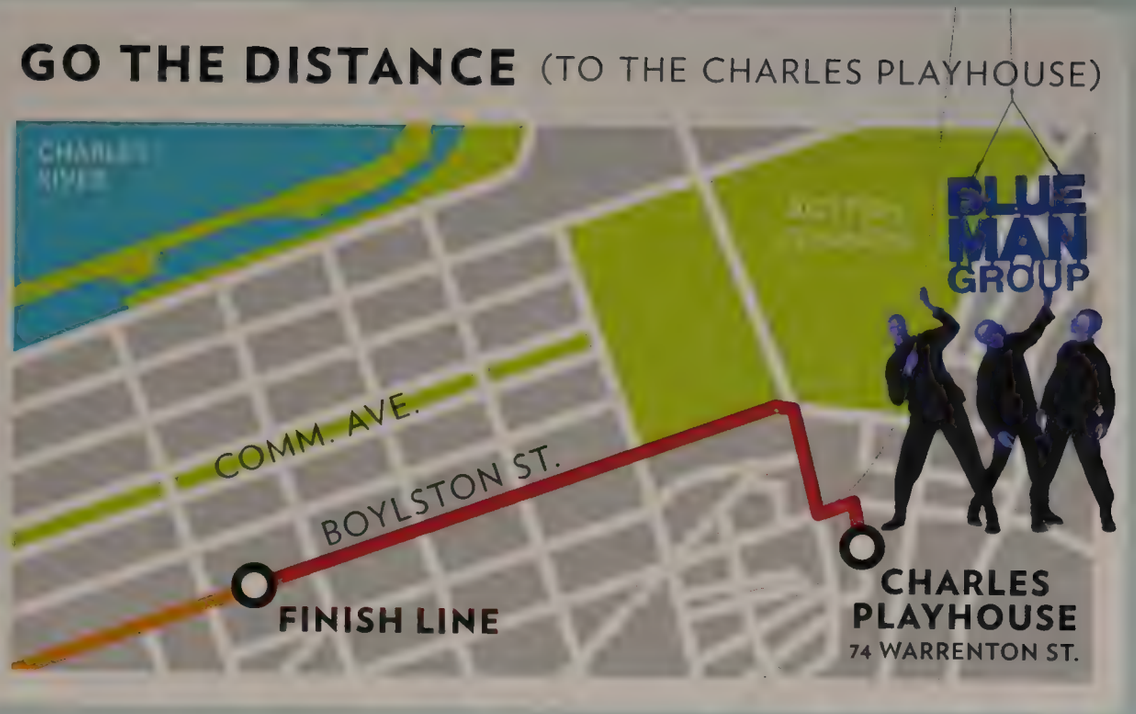
WETTER LATE

Frank De Pasquale makes a Splash.

YESTERDAY'S NEWS is next month's Splash. Come Memorial Day, restaurateur Frank De Pasquale will open his latest project, a Las Vegas–inspired lounge, in the Kneeland Street space that formerly housed News.

Let's hope the weather cooperates: Literally on top of its indoor billiards and "ultra-lounge," Splash features a fancy rooftop deck outfitted with cabanas, beds and, of course, a fountain. Downstairs, the lounge serves a lounge-y menu—think gourmet burgers—until 5 am. If breakfast is the most important meal of the day for you, there's a $20 breakfast buffet after 2 am. And the rooftop deck will offer a Sunday "rehab" brunch complete with cocktails. Is there something in the water?



BUTTER UP: Never mind fine dining and foie gras. What this city needs is a modern diner, a cheerful jolt of retro-kitsch décor based on Formica and Bakelite, housing a comforting, carb-crazed menu that runs the gamut from "green eggs and ham" (with dill sauce) to "Almond Joy" pancakes. In short, we need a local outpost of the Friendly Toast in Portsmouth, N.H. And we're getting it, hopefully in April, at One Kendall Square in Cambridge.

The new Toast will feature the same number of seats (150) and the same funky menu, but will also have a full bar. Can we expect a roster of quirky cocktails? "Oh, yeah," says owner Melissa Jasper, who's hired the bar manager of the late and lamented Tiki Lounge in Portsmouth to develop the drinks menu. Unlike the original, the Cambridge Toast won't be open 24 hours a day, at least "not initially," says Jasper.

CLOSING & OPENING: Tiny Quince Bistro in Needham has closed, as has Coriander Bistro in Sharon. Citrio in Newton has been replaced by Bread & Lily.

EAST FOR THE SENSES

Dinner at East Boston's Ecco is worth repeating.

ASK ANY BOSTONIAN who ventures to Eastie only en route to Logan to name a restaurant there, and Santarpio's is the likely response. Now, virtually across the street from that pizza landmark comes Ecco, a vibrant eatery with an engaging, comfortable ambiance and serious talent in the kitchen. Ecco may be part of a new wave of development along the waterfront, which could transform this neighborhood into gentrification's next beneficiary (or victim, depending on your point of view).

With the exception of an excess of flat-screen TVs—some thankfully dark during my two visits—Ecco's eclectic décor is pleasant bordering on handsome. Leather booths and banquettes, a high ceiling with track lighting and a pair of eye-catching sconces, dark woodwork and contrasting mirrors distinguish the principal dining area, which a room divider separates from an inviting bar.

Of the appetizers, short-rib shumai ($8) played to rave reviews. My two companions and I made short work of the first order and quickly requested another. These little bundles of savory, satisfying flavor—a mixture of ground Kobe beef and fall-off-the-bone short rib wrapped in pastry with roasted onions and an intense Asian-herb-seasoned broth—showcased chef David Fitzgerald's fusion cuisine at its best. The first order had only two of these beauties, but our evident enthusiasm apparently coaxed the kitchen into rewarding us with three for the second round. Waldorf salad ($8) paired fresh, crisp endive and candied walnuts with crunchy, tart apple slices, all bathed in an excellent vinaigrette.

The lobster and corn chowder ($10) featured some heat from a red chili puree. Combined with cilantro, it engaged with the sweetness of the lobster and corn, resulting in mouthfuls of happy flavor. The one disappointment among the appetizers, the fried calamari ($8.50), challenged me to recall a tougher, more disagreeable exemplar of this dish, unredeemed by an insipid lemon aioli reminiscent of Miracle Whip.

Ecco's lobster mac 'n' cheese ($19) quickly made me forget the sorry calamari. With well-textured pasta in a lively, lemony béchamel sauce, generous hunks of lobster, fontina cheese and a garnish of buttery bread crumbs, a half order ($12) made the perfect late-evening supper. Main courses included assertive braised short ribs ($18) benefiting from the tang of an agrodolce rendered from the Chianti in which they were cooked. Delicate baby spinach made a spectacular garnish along with a blockbuster cheesy stuffed potato. Veal Milanese ($18.50) was tasty but misnamed. Authentic veal Milanese comes hot from the stove with a crisp coating of fast-fried egg and breadcrumb batter, with only a lemon wedge to moisten it. At Ecco, the cutlet came atop black truffle–ricotta risotto; although excellent, it was out of place and undermined the meat's texture. When will Boston chefs eschew this urge to layer? Simpler and better, the sesame-and-spice-crusted tuna au poivre ($19.50) consisted of sushi-quality fish, perfectly seared, and accompanied by delectable sweet peas, jasmine rice and a well-constructed shiitake sauce.

Butterscotch crème brûlée

A more than serviceable wine list complemented the food. By the glass, a house Sangiovese ($8) was grapy but structured, while draft Ipswich IPA ($5) offered a fine alternative.

On my last Ecco meal, a trio of desserts rang the curtain down with authority. Butterscotch crème brûlée ($6.50), deliciously sweet but not cloying, could stand with any crème brûlée in the city. Flourless chocolate-espresso cake ($6.50) proved one of the best versions of this trendy dessert I've had in some time: intense, moist, dense but not heavy. Finally, house-made ice cream, especially the vanilla, more than justified the trek through the tunnel.

Ecco is aptly named. The word means "here," or "here it is" in colloquial Italian. With friendly service and extremely reasonable prices, there's no need to look further. ***

FAIL BY ANY OTHER NAME

Some dogs aren't cut out for PetPals duty.

A FEW MONTHS ago, Heather read an article about an organization called PetPals that lines up dogs to visit nursing homes. She decided that our dog, Manny, would be a perfect candidate for the job and signed him up for the PetPals temperament test. I'm not entirely psyched about the idea of hanging out in nursing homes—and I'm pretty sure you can't just send your dog in and wait outside. Not wanting to seem like an un-altruistic, old-people-hating dick, I agree to help train Manny for his test.

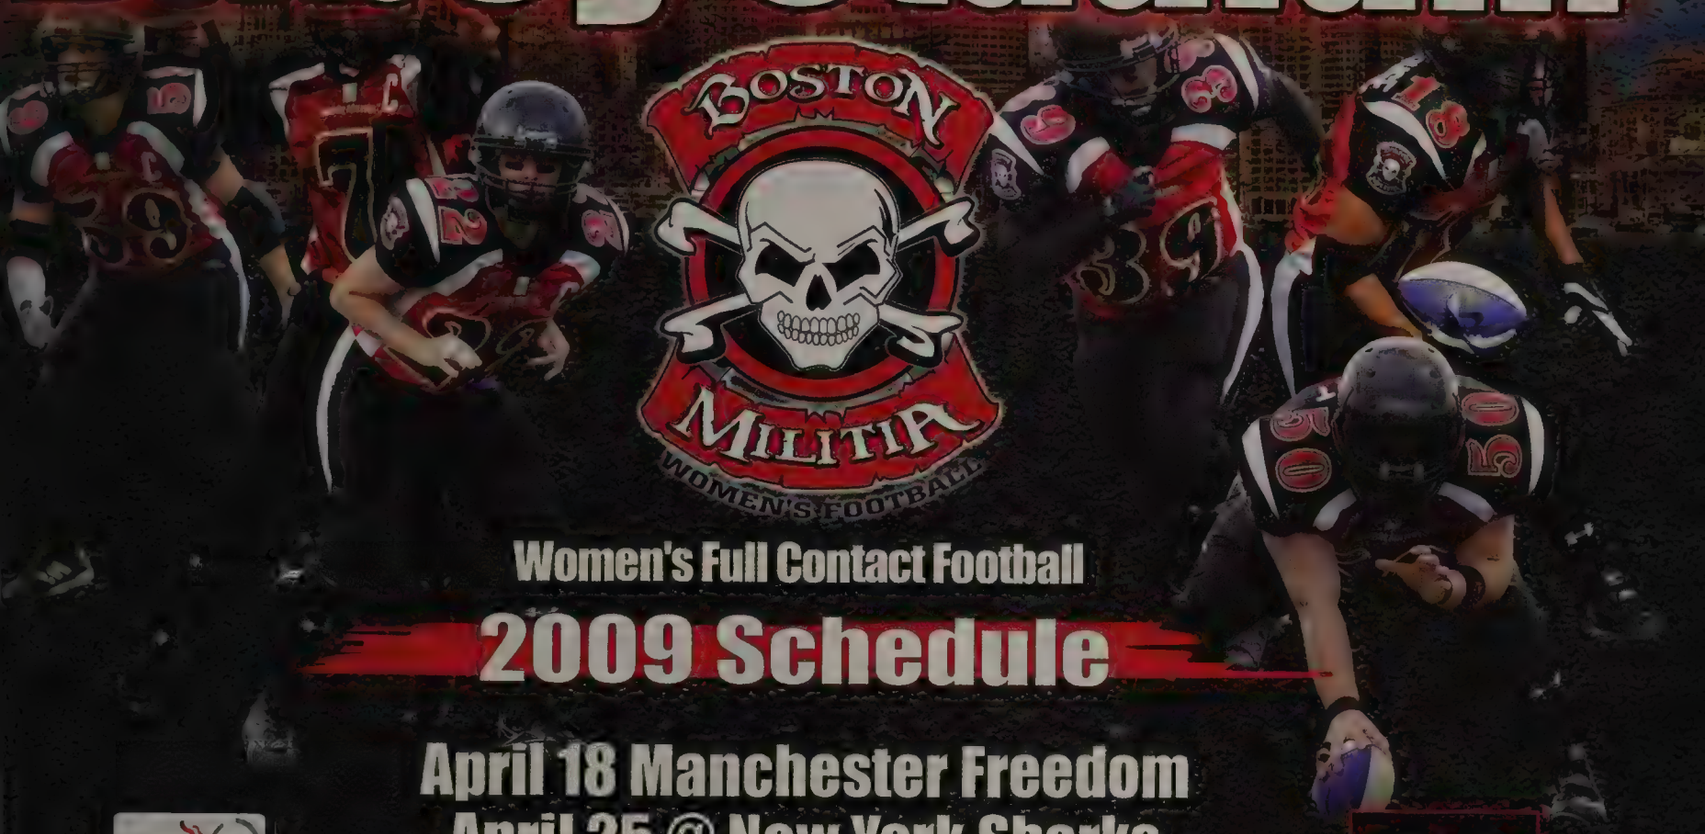
At the Animal Rescue League in the South End, we're directed to a small auditorium where the judges await. There are three or four people sitting in folding chairs, and Manny ambles up to greet them—and continues right past, on his way toward a coffee cake sitting on the table behind them. As Heather tugs futilely on the leash, her dress shoes dragging across the floor, Manny pushes between two of the chairs and knocks over a Diet Coke sitting on the floor. I shoot the judges a look that I hope says, "Ah, what an impudent but lovable scamp!" He doesn't reach the coffee cake, but we're off to a bad start.

The head judge, a vet wearing a white lab coat, grabs Manny's ears and picks up his feet. Then she asks to see him stay, so we walk across the room and he obediently remains on the opposite side until we call him. Next, the auxiliary judges swarm him and all try to pet him at once, which he seems to enjoy. I'm feeling good. Manny is crushing his job interview.

But then, the vet takes a step back and suddenly commences what can only be described as a boogeyman dance. She waves her hands in the air and yells, "Bugga-bugga-boo!" which startles me and causes Manny to morph into a snarling Cujo Jr. Meanwhile, the others sneak up behind us to bang on pans and roll a really loud trash can across the floor. Manny is growling and freaking out, but if I'd known nursing homes were such dens of sensory overload, I would've done something to get him ready, like put ecstasy in his Alpo. I thought he was visiting old people, not auditioning for Stomp.

Next we have to walk him around the perimeter of the room, where there just happens to be a table with some crackers strewn across it. Well, that's what I call a setup. At this point Heather has the leash, and once again Manny overpowers her gripless shoes and drags her over to the table, where he jumps up and devours all the crackers. The vet frowns and scribbles on her clipboard. Can we just abandon this charade and get out of here with our bad dog?

Apparently not, because there's one more exam: the senior-citizen hardware test, to determine how the dogs react to a wheelchair and a walker. Manny's fine with the wheelchair, but as the man approaches pushing the walker, I see that Manny's eyes are laser-locked on the floor. My gaze travels down the walker to the bottom of its legs, and I realize that this test, too, is going to pose a problem. You see, the front legs of the walker are modified with improvised friction-reducing covers: tennis balls.



Manny barges over to the pseudo-senior citizen and proceeds to paw at the tennis balls and yank on the front legs of the walker in an attempt to dislodge the tantalizing green orbs from their base. The vet does not look happy. I imagine that successful PetPals don't typically try to steal old people's walkers. At least we're finally done.

"I'm gonna pass him… with reservations," says the vet. "He still needs to work on a couple things." I appreciate her tactful avoidance of the word "fail." All he needs to work on is heeling and not growling at strangers or stealing food and walkers. And then he'd be almost ready.

With PetPals off the table, I can now resume my regular charitable routine of giving 15-year-old T-shirts to Goodwill and occasionally kicking in $25 when my friends hit me up for the latest Walk for the Babies With Diseases Who Live in Rainforests. We gave it a shot, but it seems like the PetPals test is geared toward dogs who are total slugs with no personality. I mean, do I really want a dog who sits there like a dumbass while someone jumps in his face and yells gibberish at him? No. I want a dog who will acknowledge that such behavior is inappropriate. Besides, I can't get mad at him. I've taken a few tests myself that I passed with reservations. ✖✖✖

THE MATING GAME

Playing matchmaker will usually get you burned.

LIKE THE WEDDING VOWS say, "for better or for worse," people are connecting on dating sites all the time. Before these sites became popular, there were personal ads in newspapers and magazines, even highbrow publications, which still appeal to people who think they're slightly better than we are. My sister is definitely better than I am: more well-traveled and gregarious and better looking. She is in the wine business, having chased her dream vintages up and down the East and West Coasts, through Europe and South Africa.

As a free spirit, she has gravitated to ads for similarly inclined men in several high-end monthlies, magazines that have articles about stalking the Yeti in the Himalayas and writing proper messages to stick into Jerusalem's Wailing Wall. Her ads, all true, were full of wine, sea salt, reading and promises of a passionate nature. But I've come to learn from female friends that truth in advertising rarely applies both ways: The guys lie through their teeth.

In my sister's words, "The thin guys turn up fat. The poets can't rhyme. The guys who went to Harvard all seem like the Unabomber, eyes rolling up in their heads. Do they believe the stuff they write about themselves?" Good question. My guess is that they do.

Some summers ago, I felt that I was particularly fit, pumping iron and losing weight. I was posing in front of a mirror, flexing like Tom Cruise from Risky Business. "I think I'm in shape," I said to my wife. She looked over at me and noted, "You've got lint in your navel." Although putting an ad into a dating service instantly occurred to me, I'd also be lying through my teeth.

My sister finally gave up on the personals after running into Georgie the Gunslinger. That was the nickname I gave a former coworker. He was a big, aggressive salesman who could "churn and burn" clients with promises of riches that mostly turned into empty pockets. And these were in fat Wall Street days, when greed ruled instead of fear and panic. Georgie the Gunslinger was smooth, charming and persistent, fine for selling cosmetics, not so wonderful for pushing questionable stocks. Although married, Georgie was also online pushing the boundaries of new relationships. He had described himself in ads as an artistic, soulful man who was into Guinness, the poetry of Yeats, Irish wolfhounds and the plays of Oscar Wilde. When my sister and Georgie met at the Black Rose and coughed up their true names, he asked in a non-Gaelic accent, "You're not related to John Spooner?"

John D. Spooner is an investment advisor, author and novelist. Contact him at thedance@improper.com.

After that they actually laughed and finished their drinks. Georgie looked at my sister and said, "Let's face it. For all of us, the virtual can be so much better than the real."

"Did Oscar Wilde say that?" My sister asked. He insisted on paying for the Guinness, and that was that.

Have you ever fixed anyone up successfully? I'm actually two for 49 in that department. My wife is worse than that, half a triumph for countless attempts. Only half because one relationship she initiated lasted for six months, but ended when the woman found the man one night in a fetal position under his bed. "He did have his good points," the friend conceded. So my wife deserved the half point.

One of my two victories happened in the spring of my senior year in college. I was dating someone who said to me, "How about I use a hidden key to get into my uncle's summer place on the North Shore for a picnic? I've got two girlfriends; you fix 'em up." One of her friends was a brunette, the other a blonde. I dragooned two of my buddies for the outing. But I didn't want any jockeying for position once they met. "We'll flip a coin before we do this," I proposed. "Heads gets the blonde; tails the brunette." My friend David got the brunette.

I grew up in a backward era.

David and the brunette, together because of a coin flip, fell in love on their first date. He had a guitar with him that day, and a throaty baritone voice. He sang folk songs with seductive themes, like "Blow the Candles Out." He was smitten; so was she, the brunette with big blues eyes and an ironic view of life. Not many people who marry have a picture of themselves on their first date. But on the bureau in their bedroom, they have a framed snapshot I took showing David playing his guitar (and Barbara staring adoringly).

Lately, I've been talking about this subject with my friend Tess, who is a classy bartender. "I know all about fix-ups and lonely people looking for love," he said. "My wife and I have an arranged marriage." Tess comes from Eritrea, a country split off from Ethiopia and riddled with civil war for years. "She and I grew up together. Our families were friends. We shared history, religion and community."

"Sounds like America years ago," I told him.

He nodded. "So we are traditional. And you learn to love each other for the right reasons; for the past as well as the future."

"Would this work for your children today?"

Tess smiled his sweet smile that says he has seen a lot of life.

"Wouldn't work today in America. No history in communities anymore that I see."

"Better fix me up with an old-fashioned martini," I said to him.

"Shaken or stirred?" Tess asked. ×××

ON HOUSE, BELICHICK AND PEDEY'S ARM

5 INGREDIENTS FOR A CELTICS REPEAT

Keep the House Burning At press time, Eddie House is about to set a new single-season record for three-point efficiency, and if you've been watching the games, this comes as absolutely no surprise. Sometime this winter, Eddie morphed into the second coming of Dana Barros. If the C's are to prevail, that's who Eddie needs to be. Would it help his focus if they hired Gabe Pruitt to babysit Jaelen during games?

Getting to Knoooow You We're not worried about the starters (they could play blindfolded on the moon and still make it click), but we do wonder how the recent rash of injuries might affect chemistry off the bench. In the playoffs, the reserves need to be one solid unit, not just an unfamiliar mix of red hair, weak knees, dreads and head tattoos. And while unity will come with time, how much time do the C's really have?

And the Man Who Must Bring Them Together Last year, Doc's playoff rotation was pretty basic: Posey for about 20 minutes, PJ for 15, a little Cassell, a little Leon and that's that. This season? Not so much. With no clear-cut sixth man (especially from a defensive standpoint), the burden is on Doc not only to create a firm rotation, but actually to stick to it. For now, we're just happy Cassell isn't involved.

Keep It Consistent The single biggest strength this year's team has over the 2008 champs is the new and improved Rajon Rondo. If it comes to a seven-game series against Cleveland (or the Lakers), Rondo needs to step up every single night. Do that for us, Rajon, and we promise the late-night phone calls will stop.

The Candyman Is Back You remember that white foreign substance Mr. Fuji used to blind his opponents back in the old school WWF? Just saying: It looks a lot like LeBron's chalk, and there's no way that at least a little of it wouldn't get in his eyes.

1 ONE MESSAGE TO THE NEW BASH BROTHERS

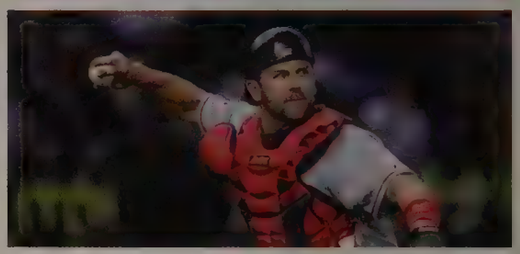
We love Dustin Pedroia's intensity, especially the forearm shiver he delivered to Big Papi after that Opening Day bomb. But Pedey, please, don't bring that shit anywhere near JD Drew. It's got 80-day DL written all over it.

4 DATES TO WATCH

4/15 It's the first night of the NHL playoffs, and has there ever been a No. 1 seed with more to prove in the first round than the 2009 Bruins? Well, maybe the 2002 Bruins but... yeah, let's just move on.

4/16 Bill Belichick turns the Big 5-7, and you know BB's going to celebrate. If by celebrate, you mean break down game film until 4 am and then fall asleep in his office while listening to an acoustic version of Bon Jovi's "Bed of Roses."

4/20 It's the 114th running of the Boston Marathon, a time-honored tradition where thousands of brave, dedicated souls converge on the city to... get drunk and watch crazy people run themselves ragged. (We only joke because we lack dignity.)



4/24 The Yanks are in town for a Friday night at Fenway, and if you're looking to get some heckling in afterwards, we hear that Derek Jeter's reserved a postgame table at Gypsy Bar, while CC Sabathia will set up shop by the oven at Little Steve's House of Pizza.

SEND FEEDBACK TO RICH@IMPROPER.COM AND READ MORE AT COMCASTSPORTSNET.COM.

2 NFL DRAFT WANTS

Live War Room Camera April 25 marks the first time since 1996 that Bill Belichick will spend draft day without Scott Pioli by his side. We'd love to see how it all plays out, if only to witness a stressed-out Belichick scream, "Come on, Scott, whaddaya think here?!?" Awkward!

Easy on the TEs Rumor has it the Pats might draft tight end Brandon Pettigrew with their first pick, but we're praying to the God of Marv Cook that that's all it is: A dirty, filthy "Marilyn Manson is Paul from The Wonder Years" type rumor. Hey, if you can get someone to take Ben Watson, then fine, but otherwise, how about finding the Terrell Suggs to Jerod Mayo's Ray Lewis?

3 Reasons This Year Will Be Better Than the Last

Captain Comeback It's dangerous to get too caught up in Opening Day, but after last season, how could you watch Jason Varitek's homer and not run wild with optimism? Of course, in this case, optimism only amounts to .260/20/80, but still... welcome back 'Tek!

Julio's Already Hurt! We wish no ill will, but if a faulty meniscus is what it takes to ensure that the Nine Million Dollar Man stays on the bench, we'll take it. Sure, Jed Lowrie might struggle a little, but when Mike Lowell's your No. 7 hitter, you can sacrifice a little pop in favor of a shortstop who doesn't throw like a drunk Chuck Knoblauch.

Primo Pen Bryan Corey, David Aardsma, Kyle Snyder and Julian Tavarez. That band of misfits made up the bulk of your 2008 Opening Day bullpen. This year, we're hard-pressed to find a weak spot. OK, maybe Ramon Ramirez, but only because we're not sure he existed before being traded to Boston.

Soroff On ANTJE DUVEKOT

The singer/songwriter chats about dandelions, atheism and crushing, German darkness.

SOMERVILLE-BASED SINGER/SONGWRITER ANTJE DUVEKOT was born in Heidelberg, Germany, before moving to Delaware as a teenager. At 18, she won the first open-mike competition she ever entered, and less than a year later, she released a self-produced album entitled Waterstains. Her song "Soma" won the grand prize in the rock category of the John Lennon Songwriting Contest in 2000, and she's racked up other accolades, including a Boston Music Award for outstanding folk act. Now 32, Duvekot has performed at the Newport Folk Festival, the Celtic Connections Festival in Scotland and the Tonder Festival in Denmark. Her song "Merry Go Round" was used in a Bank of America ad, and she has followed up her debut album, Big Dream Boulevard (which NPR named one of the Top 10 Releases of the Year), with her new record The Near Demise of the High Wire Dancer.

Jonathan Soroff: First of all, what's the correct pronunciation of your name?
Antje Duvekot: OK, it's pretty tricky. It's Aunt-yuh Doo-va-kott. The first name is especially tricky.

On the radio, they call you everything from Ant-ja to Angie to Anja. Doesn't that drive you crazy?
No. I kind of get a kick out of it that they're saying my name at all, and as for trying to correct it, it's a waste of time. Americans have a problem making the correct "zh" sound, anyway. I immediately know if someone is from Germany if they can actually say my name.

You've been pigeonholed as a folk musician. Do you feel that's fair or accurate?
Folk is such a broad genre, I'm sure I fit into it somehow. I think I could be described as alternative, too. It depends upon how the songs are produced.

Do you feel like a high-wire dancer?
Yeah. I think most of my songs are pretty autobiographical. And in that song, I'm picturing a relationship with someone I want but I'm not sure I can have them. I can only really describe my feelings in metaphors.

Did you ever busk in the subway or play as a street musician?
Yeah, when I lived in New York City I played in the subway. I could only do it an hour at a time because I'd blow out my voice in such a loud environment. So I'd try to play late at night in quieter subway stops. I wasn't there so much to entertain them as to drag them down and make them give me their money. [Laughs.]

PHOTOGRAPH BY GREGORY WOSTREL

In writing a song, what comes first: the music or the lyrics?
The music, for me, is pure torture. I don't feel like I can write a good melody, so I just hammer away at it for hours and it's not fun at all. The lyrics come pretty easily. So I tend to write the melody and then, once it's intact, comes the fun part: dressing it up with lyrics.

Does your German background inform your music?
Maybe. I think German culture is more comfortable diving into dark places without fear. American culture has a tendency to avoid dark topics in general.

So you think it's fair to characterize your music as dark?
Sure, I think so.

Ever worry that being happy will sap your creativity?
I do, but I would love that. Being happy is better than being a great artist.

Can you see yourself playing with a backup band instead of all acoustic?
I'd love to. If I could make more money, I'd love to take a band on the road. But at this point, it's not financially viable. I'd love to have the company on the road, and it would certainly sound less monotonous to have a soundscape behind me.

Does being a musician get you laid?
[Laughs.] Yeah. I think everyone wants to find something in their lives that allows them to connect to other people and make them feel special or show part of themselves, and for me, music has been my bridge to people. So, yes. I have to be honest about that.

What one thing will make you feel like you've really arrived?
If I could play fewer shows. It would be nice to relax a little more. [Laughs.] I don't really see myself becoming very famous, because I think that I'd be extremely uncomfortable with it.

Is your growing stardom unnerving?
Yes. It's a tickly feeling of enjoying the compliments and then being uncomfortable with the attention. I never know what to say back to people who say they like my music, and it's completely awkward.

Ever worry that your talent will evaporate?
I think it already has, but don't tell anyone. [Laughs.] Yeah, I think I'm never going to write another song. My manager's probably going to worry when he reads this.

Do you have any superstitions when writing music?
Yes. Even though I'm a complete atheist, when I'm writing or being creative, I feel like I'm in touch with some kind of greater being, and that the creative well is not entirely inside of myself. I think that most artists feel that way, if I'm not mistaken. You're somehow communing with some kind of greater pool of something. It's very spiritual. I feel like it's not really coming out of me. I'm just opening myself and hoping that it will grace me with its presence. It's kind of like begging the muse to pay attention.

Which of your songs is most raw or revealing about yourself?
I think "Dandelion." It's a confessional song about how I don't feel like a very special flower, more like a weed, and that I'll never be able to get the attention of this boy that I'm in love with. That was a very honest song and sort of scary to put out there, but so many people have responded to it, saying that they're dandelions, too, so I'm starting to feel OK about it.

Will you write a song about me?
OK.

Last question: Do I have to break your heart for you to write a song about me?
No. You can have your heart broken. I think I'd prefer that. ×××

THE FIX IS IN

By Amanda Knorr Illustrations by Zela

When renting apartments in the Boston area (or anywhere), you're either paying for location or square footage. If you're lucky enough to have both, then you can skip this article and flip to Michael Holley's Red Sox feature on page 36. This story is for renters who make sacrifices. Those who have a Beacon Hill address, but live in a 350-square-foot apartment, which includes their kitchen, with their clothes closet in the bathroom (that'd be me). Or those who have a spacious Back Bay abode, but scrape their knuckles on the ceiling when they stretch. The majority of us have issues with our apartments that we'd like to change, but sometimes moving isn't an option, and, as these four interior designers prove, relocating isn't always necessary. We gave them each a scenario to show that a little decorating advice can make you appreciate what you've got.

Duncan Hughes, owner of Duncan Hughes Interiors, tackles a tiny space.

Small-apartment living is about maximizing versatility. One mistake people often make is believing that the less furniture you put into a space, the larger it will feel. The exact opposite is true. Rooms feel larger with furniture in them than when they're empty. The key to success here is being mindful of scale. Consistencies in seat heights and depths, arm heights, the height of an end table and how it relates to the arm of a chair are more important than you might think. It's best not to waste space with big, bulky roll arms on your sofa. Opt instead for lean arms that give way to more seating area where it counts.

Since absolutely everything gets noticed in a small apartment, invest in a few luxuries to make a strong visual impact: table linens, artwork, an interesting lamp or Tibetan carpet. Think carefully about absolutely every object and piece of furniture in the room and make sure each individual item contributes to the whole.

Keep it simple. Choose a limited color [scheme] and stick to it. I recently finished a very small room that functioned as an office, a den, and a guest room (all in 80 square feet!). We chose a palette of snow white, mink brown, and watermelon red. The result was a room that was simple, easy to understand, uncluttered and visually relaxing.

Technology has certainly helped immensely with small spaces. Gone are the days of 28-inch-deep TVs that required a hulking media cabinet that towered over a room. Bulky and complex stereo systems can now be replaced with an iPod and a decent set of speakers. This allows you to reclaim some much-needed square footage and to be a bit more creative in the layout of a smaller living room or den.

Don't be afraid to go darker when choosing colors for the walls. I sometimes hear from my clients that they feel a small space needs to be painted in a bright, light color to make it feel bigger. Actually, painting in a darker, cool color will make the wall recess away from you. Warm colors tend to creep up on you, while cooler ones recede.

Transparent items (glass-top tables, clear Lucite chairs) help to open up a space. A well-placed framed mirror can help to create the illusion of space beyond the room you are in, as well as reflect natural light to otherwise dim areas of a room. In small spaces, it is sometimes best to avoid heavy, clunky or very dark wood pieces.

Erin Gates, owner of Element Interiors, takes on a basement apartment.

Living in a city like Boston presents many benefits, but there are also some tough sticking points when it comes to city dwelling—namely those gloomy, dark basement bedrooms that often come with garden-level units. While the lack of light makes for great sleeping conditions, these spaces can often seem dreary and awkward. [But] there are tricks you can use to make even the bleakest basement bedroom feel relaxing and welcoming.

Lighten up. Paint the walls a light color, try ethereal blues and crisp greens for a spa-like feel. Keep your furniture soft and cozy if you can. Lighter-colored upholstered headboards and painted-wood dressers will float instead of weigh down the room like dark wood can.

See clearly. Add in some Lucite or glass accents in side tables, lamps and small chairs. This will free up visual space and add some sparkle to an otherwise dismal room.

Fake it. Those small little windows can be a bit of a bummer, so frame them in ceiling to floor-length drapes to visually draw the eye up and elongate the walls. Use a semi-sheer fabric and keep them closed to make it appear as if there are full sized window behind them. Large mirrors will also bounce light around a space and give the effect of windows.

Play with patterns. In one basement bedroom I'm working on, we're wallpapering the wall behind the bed with a metallic modern print. This is going to add a huge dose of interest and movement to the space for a modest amount of money.

Michael Ferzoco, owner of Eleven Interiors, negotiates an oddly shaped room.

The restrictions of an oddly shaped room (think bay windows, asymmetrical walls, an off-center fireplace, or windows at varied heights) can be difficult to work with when planning your space. Let's focus on a bay window space.

Paint is the easiest way to unify a space, to make it brighter, or to make it feel larger or smaller. It'll help to make the space feel unified but designate it as a separate zone—because that's what it is. The area can be used for a small dining table and chairs, a pair of slipper chairs with a small table between them, or just for a single upholstered chaise. Paint all the trim/woodwork the same color: a creamy white or even the same color as the walls. Just use a different finish (satin or semi-gloss instead of flat latex as on the walls.)

The floor can be inexpensively designated as a separate zone by placing a small rug under the furniture. FLOR tiles are great for an easily affordable and hip look, and [you can] change out [individual] square tiles should they be soiled, keeping the rug looking new.

Use furniture pieces that look "light." Buy a glass- or Lucite-top dining table with a pedestal base. Too many legs (table and chairs) create confusion and clutter in the small space of a bay window. And go round! The shape will accentuate the bay window space. If you use the bay window area for a pair of upholstered chairs or a chaise, be sure that the chair backs aren't too high and the furniture isn't bulky and overstuffed. In this case, use side tables that are glass, Lucite or mirrored. Those materials won't diminish the utilitarian aspect of the space, but they'll give you a less bulky/cluttered look.

Kathleen Mannix, a masters student at the New England School of Art and Design at Suffolk University and an aspiring residential interior designer, grapples with low ceilings.

[Low ceilings] can leave an apartment feeling like an unwelcoming and claustrophobic cavern. Fortunately, there are a few interior design tricks that can help create a sense of height and make your apartment feel more airy and open.

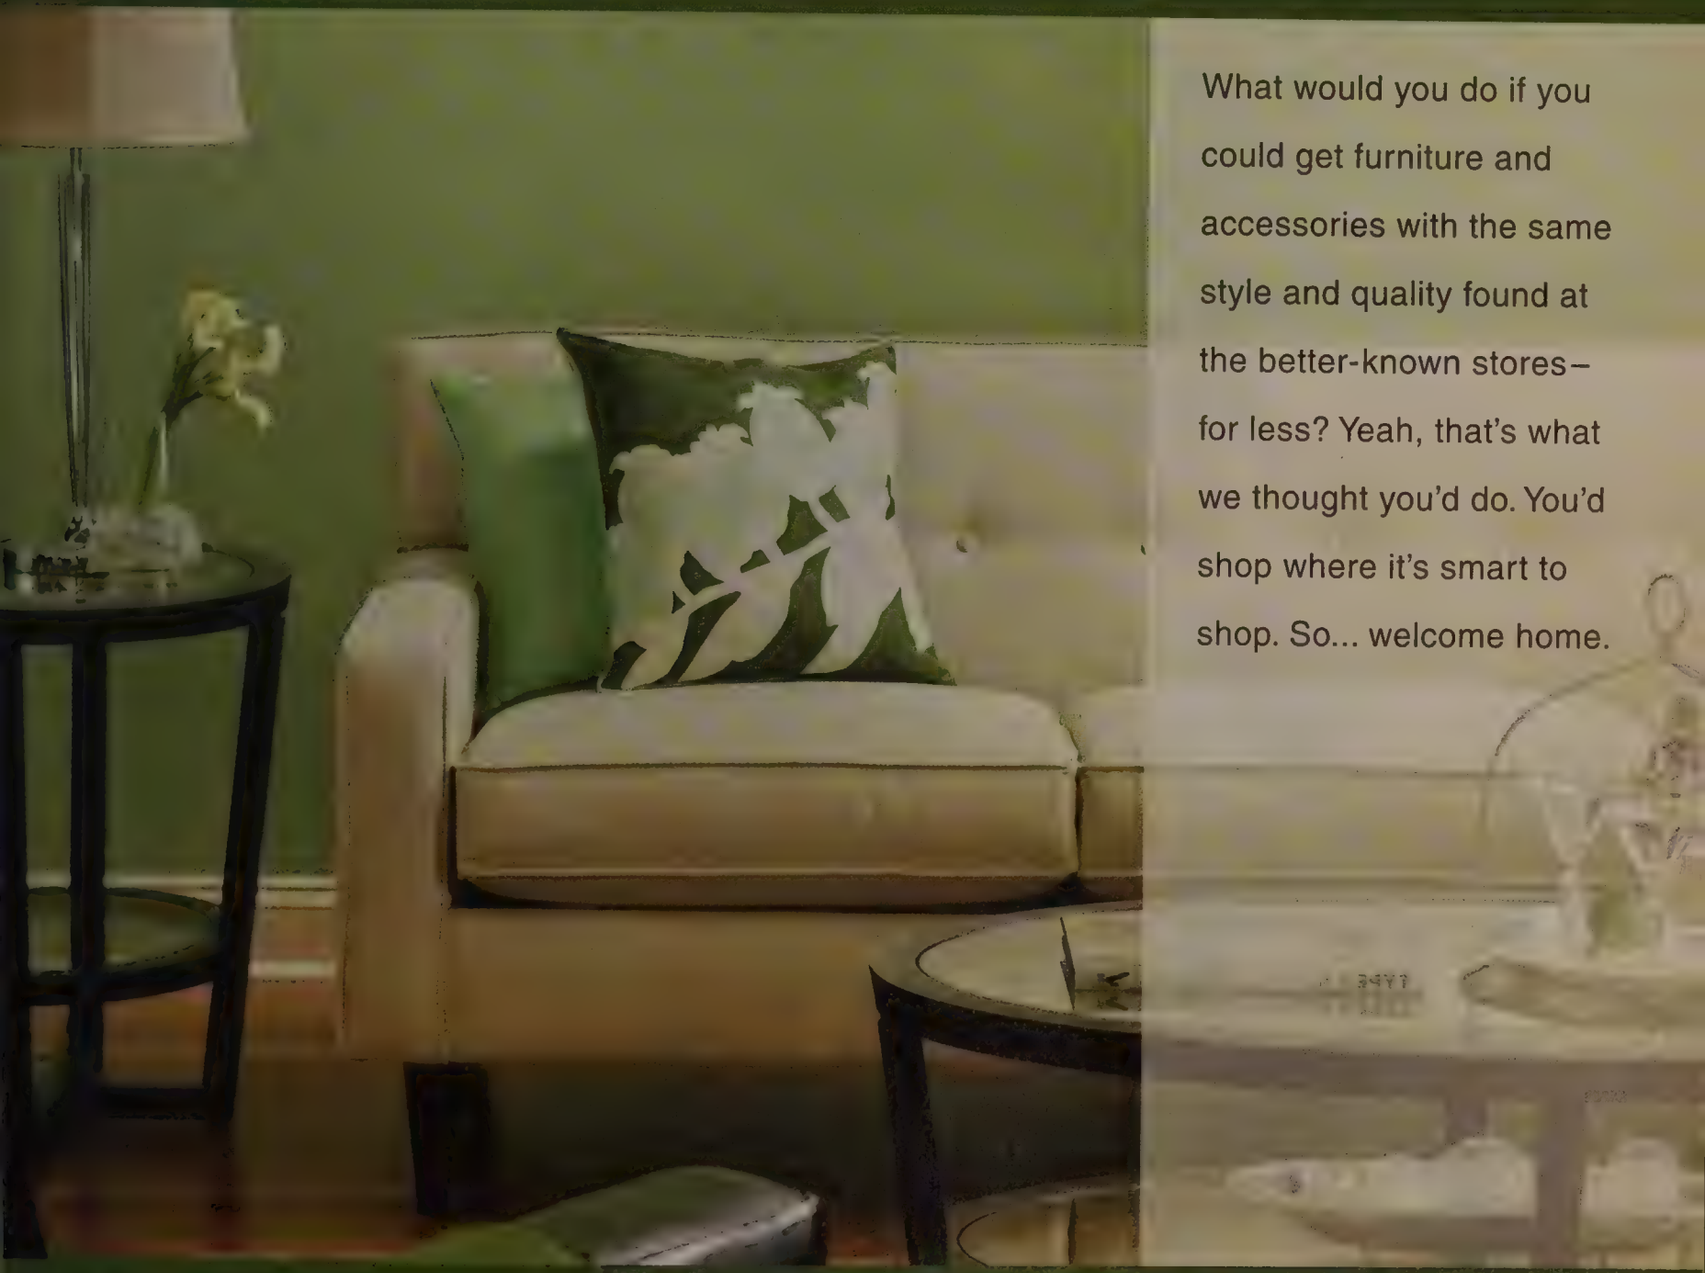
To visually raise a ceiling, you want to stress vertical lines on the walls and avoid emphasis on any horizontal wall elements. Try to eliminate all horizontal moldings (i.e. chair rail or wainscoting) on the walls.

[Paint the walls] relaxing cream hues, or greens and blues that we find in nature—colors that we often associate with large expanses of space in the world outside. White is not always the best choice for a ceiling. In a room with a high ceiling, white makes it appear farther away, but in a room with low ceilings, it can actually have the opposite effect.

If your walls are a much brighter color than the typical white ceiling then another trick would be to paint your ceiling a color similar to your walls. The easiest way to do this is to take your wall color and mix it with white paint with a ratio of about 1:4. Then paint your ceiling the lighter shade. Again, I only recommend this for rooms that are painted in a cool airy tone.

Use vertical stripes, which draw the eyes up, to decorate your low-ceilinged room. You can use wallpaper or paint to add vertical stripes to the walls. [Try] using paint colors that are just different shades of the same color.

Shining light up towards the ceiling creates the illusion of height. Wall sconces and floor lamps are good choices. A pendant/chandelier will impede on the small space and make the room seem smaller, and recessed lighting will make the room smaller by creating a strong emphasis on the floor.



Choose furniture that's low to the ground with clean vertical lines. Also, incorporate pieces with strong vertical lines, like taller bookshelves and cabinets, which will further reinforce the verticality of the space.

If you're hanging artwork, avoid hanging it all at the same level. Instead, try hanging your artwork vertically, in stacks of two or three, once again creating a vertical line that will emphasize the height of the wall. ×××

In the Blood

The passion of Red Sox first baseman Kevin Youkilis

By Michael Holley
Photographs by Kerry Brett

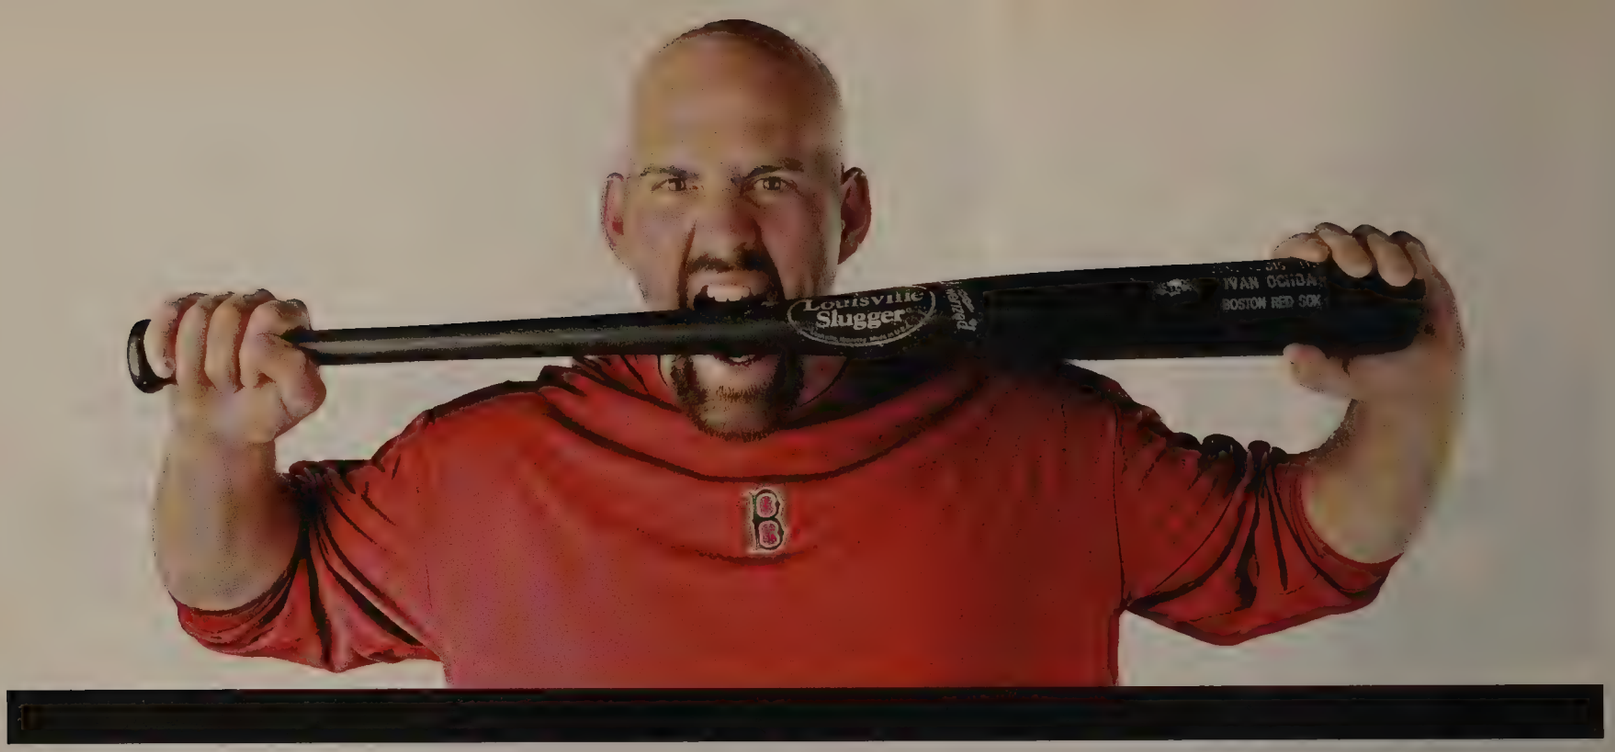
The intensity has always been there for Kevin Youkilis. As long ago as he can remember, back in 1984, when he was five and a T-baller with an attitude, only a couple years removed from diapers, he was already wondering why the adults in charge wouldn't raise the stakes.

The grown-ups had this idea of not keeping score, a concept as soft as the postgame ice cream that most kids associate with summer and baseball. Not only did Youkilis have a constant need to know the score, he had to win. And if you're playing to win, it means you're playing with purpose and passion. Who cares if your competition is more concerned with playing with Transformers?

Anyway, the kid didn't have a choice. This intensity began as a family thing. It was nurtured as a Cincinnati thing. And it would eventually grow into a love, heartbreak and redemption thing, too. So it makes sense when you hear the story of the 11-year-old Youkilis getting thrown out of a game for arguing an umpire's bad call at first base, and his father, Mike—running in from the stands to protest—getting thrown out with him.

Or how Mike took his love for his three sons and baseball into his bare hands: He began with the idea that 50 pieces of wood was all he needed to construct a batting cage for the backyard; 250 additional pieces of wood and three weeks later, he had the cage and a pitching machine to go with it. Sometimes the kids would take the machine to the front yard, aim it toward the sky and shoot baseballs out at the highest speed. If you could catch the high flyballs there, you could catch them anywhere.

Kevin Youkilis was shaped by this Cincinnati, a city that took your generic verbs and nouns and spat back specifics. Hustle, whether formal or slang, was Pete Rose. Managing was Lou Piniella, who could theoretically share a beer with you and have your back in a bar fight—a brawl that he likely started. Ribs and chili were Montgomery Inn and Skyline, nationally known yet distinctly local. And intensity was everybody, including former Red (and Yankee) Paul O'Neill, who suffered after each out and made watercoolers, batting helmets, bats and umps suffer with him. It was O'Neill who once tossed a baseball to young Youkilis at old Riverfront Stadium, an appropriate transfer on many levels.



It was high-strung pro to high-strung pro-in-the-making, in a stadium that no longer exists. While athletes like Youkilis—hell, for that matter, guys like Youkilis—are certainly not extinct, they fall somewhere between misunderstood and altogether unnoticed. Youkilis was an All-American at the University of Cincinnati. He either set or tied 10 school records. He had a career on-base percentage of .499, which meant he spent exactly half of his college days occupying a base. And he was an eighth-round draft pick of the Red Sox in 2001. So people knew his name and game. The problem was that his first love, the Cincinnati Reds, didn't love him back.

"Looking at it now, everything obviously worked out for the best," he says. "But I had a lot of animosity over it for a while. My college games were, what, two miles from where the Reds played? And they looked at me and kind of shrugged their shoulders."

They may have shrugged their shoulders because of the way his shoulders looked. This was long before the days when Youkilis would awaken at 6 am, have a light breakfast by 7 and begin his routine of stretching, running and lifting in the Arizona desert by 8. He does that every offseason, four days a week, as a calorie-counting, carb-conscious first baseman for the Red Sox. In college, he was a pudgy kid who was a glance away from Montgomery Inn and Skyline. He had a squatty, unconventional stance, and he wasn't projected to hit for much power if he ever made it to the big leagues. There's a chance the Reds and other teams may have missed his talent because they were so consumed with his body. In a bad way.

"My philosophy is that a ballplayer is a ballplayer. You can put an NFL linebacker in a baseball uniform and, yeah, he's going to look pretty good. But that doesn't make him a baseball player. I've always been a little... well, I've always been someone who may not look the best in uniform. I don't think it matters."

He is 30 years old now, and, in some ways, he is exactly what you see at Fenway Park: Bald, bearded and practically sweating out the Charles as he prepares for a pitch. He is pacing, wiping, grunting, cursing. He is the Red Sox' cleanup hitter for 2009, the permanent holder of the spot that was long held by Manny Ramirez. But the pressure of occupying the space that used to be Manny's is not what drives him. He would be this way in any city, in any lineup slot, on any night. His first year in pro baseball was O'Neill's last, but he has continued the tradition of approaching each at-bat as if his career, or life, will be judged by a sequence of five or six pitches.

"Sometimes I think he loves baseball more than he loves his family," says his wife, Enza. "It's his life. It's a huge part of his life. It doesn't bother me because I know life as a professional athlete is short-lived. Now, if it was 80 years of this? I don't know. When he does retire, I think that first year is going to be rough for him."

A baseball love that strong can easily be taken the wrong way without knowledge of where it comes from, so maybe that's the reason New York's Joba Chamberlain continues to throw at Youkilis with all the subtlety of a Boston pothole. Even closer to home, who can forget the night last June when Youkilis and Manny Ramirez had words over Youkilis' excess passion? That fight wasn't much of a fight at all, and Youkilis says the only thing that bothers him now about it was the helmet that got in the way.

"He had a helmet in his hand and I got hit with it," he says. "I was mad about that, but nothing else. I don't think people understand that Manny and I were close. We worked out together. Our wives were close. He apologized for everything, and we were cool."

People might not understand that Youkilis has other gears, too. It's certainly in character for him to say, "I don't like losing, especially in sports. Look, if you brought Barack Obama in here and we started playing basketball, I'm gonna shut him down. I wouldn't play just to be playing. The Secret Service might have to jump on me or something. I like to win."

What's not as well known is his personality when there are no games to be played or watched. His friends say he is a master impersonator. He developed his Will Ferrell–as–Harry Caray routine in college and often mimics random comics on Comedy Central. He also has been able to produce smiles with his Needham-based charity, Hits for Kids. The charity is a perfect example of an athlete taking advantage of his celebrity for a good cause. According to Enza, Hits for Kids is able to keep its administrative costs low because so many individuals and businesses have volunteered their services and equipment. As a result, it allows the charity to devote the bulk of its proceeds to helping children.

"That's the heart and soul of why we live, in my opinion," says Youkilis. "To raise kids, teach them values and help them. It's something I enjoy."

That thought was well in place before Hits for Kids existed. Youkilis met Enza in New York in 2004, but their relationship did not follow a prefab boy-meets-girl route. They tried dating, decided it wasn't the right time, and Enza married someone else. The marriage was brief, but when Enza left it she also had a son, Mikey. He's 3½ now, but since he could talk he's been calling two men Daddy: his biological father and Youkilis, also known as "Daddy Pook."

"In the beginning, it was a little tough to explain to people. At times, I tiptoed around it because I didn't want to explain everything," he says. "But now it's like, 'Hey, he's my son.' In his eyes, I'm his father and in my eyes he's my son. It's the greatest thing. I can come home after having the worst game, and Mikey doesn't care. It's unconditional love."

Youkilis says that he can envision how his time in baseball will end. For him, perfection would be playing his entire career in a Boston uniform. And then, one day—a day far beyond any horizon that can be seen from Fenway—after a World Series win, he'd give an interview and announce his retirement.

Rings, champion or not, are a Youkilis tradition. Youkilis' grandfather owned a retail jewelry store; his uncle had a wholesale company; and his father, who has been the jewelry business for 38 years, is the co-owner of Midwest Diamond Distributors. Kevin Youkilis has known rings his entire life. Just like he's known winning and baseball.

It's in his blood. ✖✖✖

Gimme a Ring

Theo's hot stove may not have cooked up any big-name free agents last winter, but that's because the 2009 Red Sox are already in good shape to make a run at another title.

BY EZRA DYER
PHOTOGRAPHS BY KEN RICHARDSON

LAST SPRING, the Red Sox were the defending World Series champions, with all the expectations that come with winning two championships in four years. This time, they're just another team that got vanquished by the D-Rays in the postseason. They're down two future Hall-of-Famers, with Schilling retired and Manny off to the Dodgers. Papi's wrist has proven to be a long-term problem. While the Sox managed to sign Varitek, his offensive output is sporadic and his successor is unclear. And, of course, the Yankees have a brand-new stadium and several hundred million dollars' worth of fresh free agents to throw at us. Are the 2009 Red Sox, then, a team in decline, a fleetingly powerful organization in the throes of painful reinvention? Are they once again relegated to their role as the suffering also-ran?

It would seem so on the face of it, but the Red Sox are merely sticking to the formula that's proven successful in recent years—avoiding the shiny allure of the $100 million free agent and concentrating on less flashy aspects that actually contribute to long-term success. The modern Sox don't sign Mark Teixeira, but they re-sign Kevin Youkilis. They also sign Jon Lester, Dustin Pedroia and Jonathan Papelbon—all young, outstanding homegrown players. Perhaps the most amazing thing about this core group isn't that the Sox cultivated these players, but that they resisted the urge to trade them in pursuit of whatever veteran was available for that year's stretch run. Evidently, the epic sin of Jeff Bagwell–for–Larry Andersen remains seared in the Sox' consciousness. As does the decision to trade a useful guitar strummer named Bronson Arroyo for Wily Mo Peña, a guy who managed to strike out with amazing frequency, considering that he used a mature sequoia tree for a bat. Of course, immediately after the Sox traded Arroyo (for the incredible reason that there were too many starters), everyone got hurt. Which proves the old adage that you can't have too many pitchers, especially ones that own boats named "The Nasty Hook."

Entering the 2009 season, the Red Sox have a slew of great young players supported by a cast of veterans and the occasional high-profile acquisition like Dice-K and JD Drew. The Sox have loads of pitching depth, and, so far, it looks like they're loath to trade it away. And they've taken a few flyers on guys who might pan out and might not, a strategy you might call the Bartolo Colon Gambit. None of that makes for sexy headlines, but it does make for a team that's in contention, year in and year out.

That said, here are a few of the stories, both on and off the field, that are worth your attention.

Fenway, Land of the Rising Fastball

Schilling was the wizened mentor on the pitching staff, but now the Sox have picked up an equivalent figure for Dice-K and Okajima: Takashi Saito, a 39-year-old Japanese pitcher. Saito is new to the team and thus needs a good nickname, so allow us to think one up for him: Takashi… Kashi cereal… serial killer… Hannibal Lecter. Done. Memo to Papelbon: start calling Saito "Hannibal the Cannibal." Refuse to explain why, but just assure him that it makes complete sense and is badass.

With Saito on the roster, about 20 percent of the Sox pitching staff is now Japanese. And with Junichi Tazawa waiting in the minors, the Sox are primed to have more Japanese hurlers than the Hokkaido Nippon Ham Fighters. When we asked Theo Epstein about Japan as a source for players, he said, "Japan is the new Dominican Republic." No, he didn't, actually. In Japan they keep better track of birth certificates.

Happy Hour by Any Other Name Is Still Wicked Sweet

In recognition of the less-than-robust economy, the Sox have rolled out "Fenway Family Hour" and kept concession prices (and ticket prices) at 2008 levels. Which is a little disingenuous as a gesture of financial mercy, because in April 2008 everyone still had a job. But this family hour is an interesting concept: For the first hour after gates open, nine menu items are half-price. Which is sort of a sneaky way of having a Happy Hour, because the money you save on Fenway Franks can be directly reinvested in beer.

Who's Backstopping the Backstop?

With Scott Boras pulling his patented "We have another team interested in my client, and they want to offer him a 10-year deal for a zillion billion dollars, and so you should be scared even though that team exists only in my imagination," we thought we might've seen the last of Varitek. Fortunately, despite Boras' posturing, the captain is back for at least one more year. Varitek brings a lot of intangibles to the table, such as helping the young whippersnappers learn how to shove a mitt in people's grills, and how to have an insufferable agent.

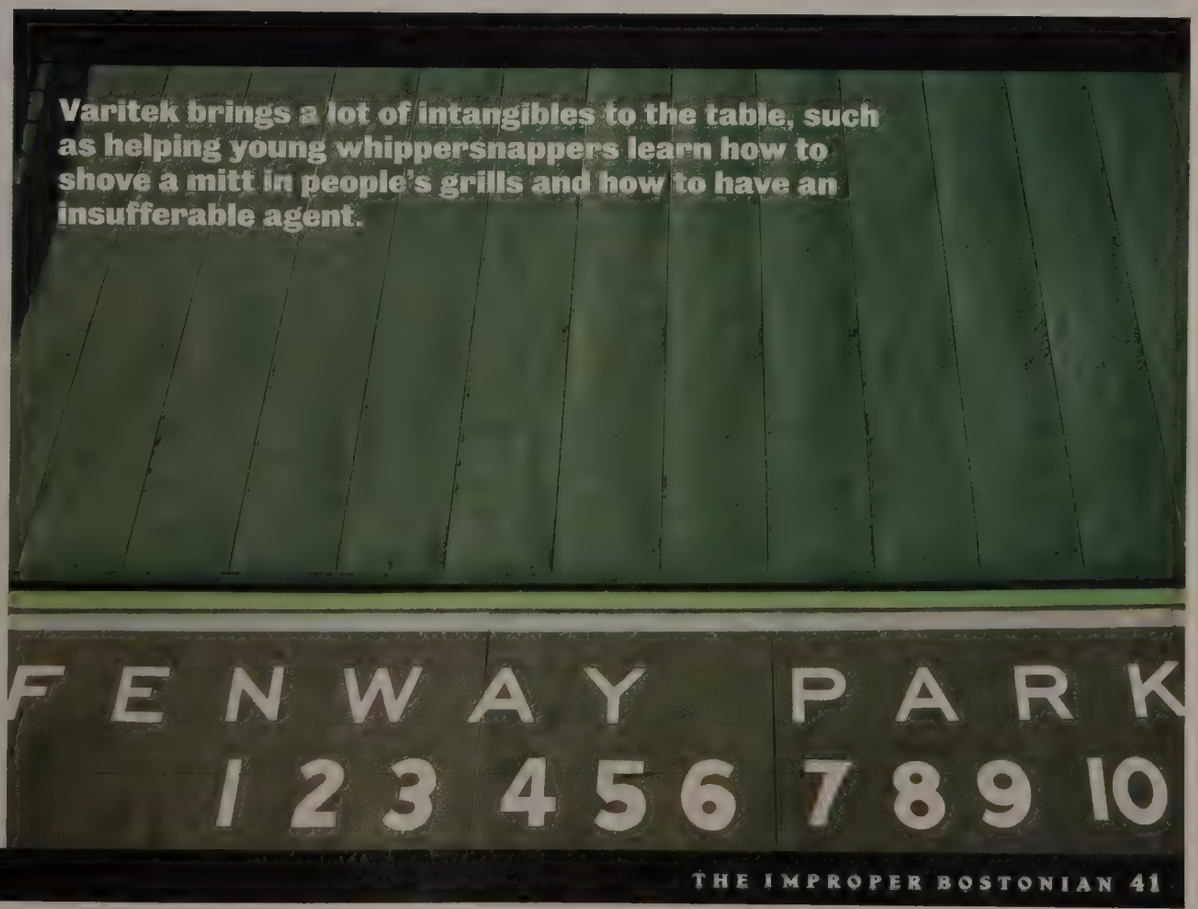
Varitek critics say that his defense and pitch-calling are overrated. We'd say that the importance of offensive production out of a catcher is overrated. That said, perhaps somebody needs to have a talk with 'Tek about the switch-hitting strategy. When you bat 83 points higher from one side of the plate than the other (.284 from the right side versus .201 from the left last year), then maybe it's time to abandon the switch-hitting conceit. Also, every fifth start it looks like we'll have George Kottaras playing the Doug Mirabelli role, which is to say, taking 60-mph knuckleballs off the chest protector. And possibly getting naked in the back of police cars. That part remains to be seen.

Hail the Underdogs

So the Yankees got blue-chip free agents like Mark Teixeira and AJ Burnett; we got 84-year-old John Smoltz and a guy named Rocco who has chronic fatigue syndrome. Smoltz is so old that when you say he played for the Braves, you have to specify, "in Atlanta, after they moved." Sure, in Florida he only allowed one run in 18 innings. But that was against minor-league hitters. In 1986. When Jon Lester was two.

Right now, Smoltz is rehabbing his shoulder, but hopefully he'll be active for the home series against the Yankees that starts June 9. Because there's a good chance Smoltz won't be totally back to form by then, and can plausibly claim that he was shaking off the rust when he drills A-Rod right in his shrunken testicles.

The Name Is Bonds

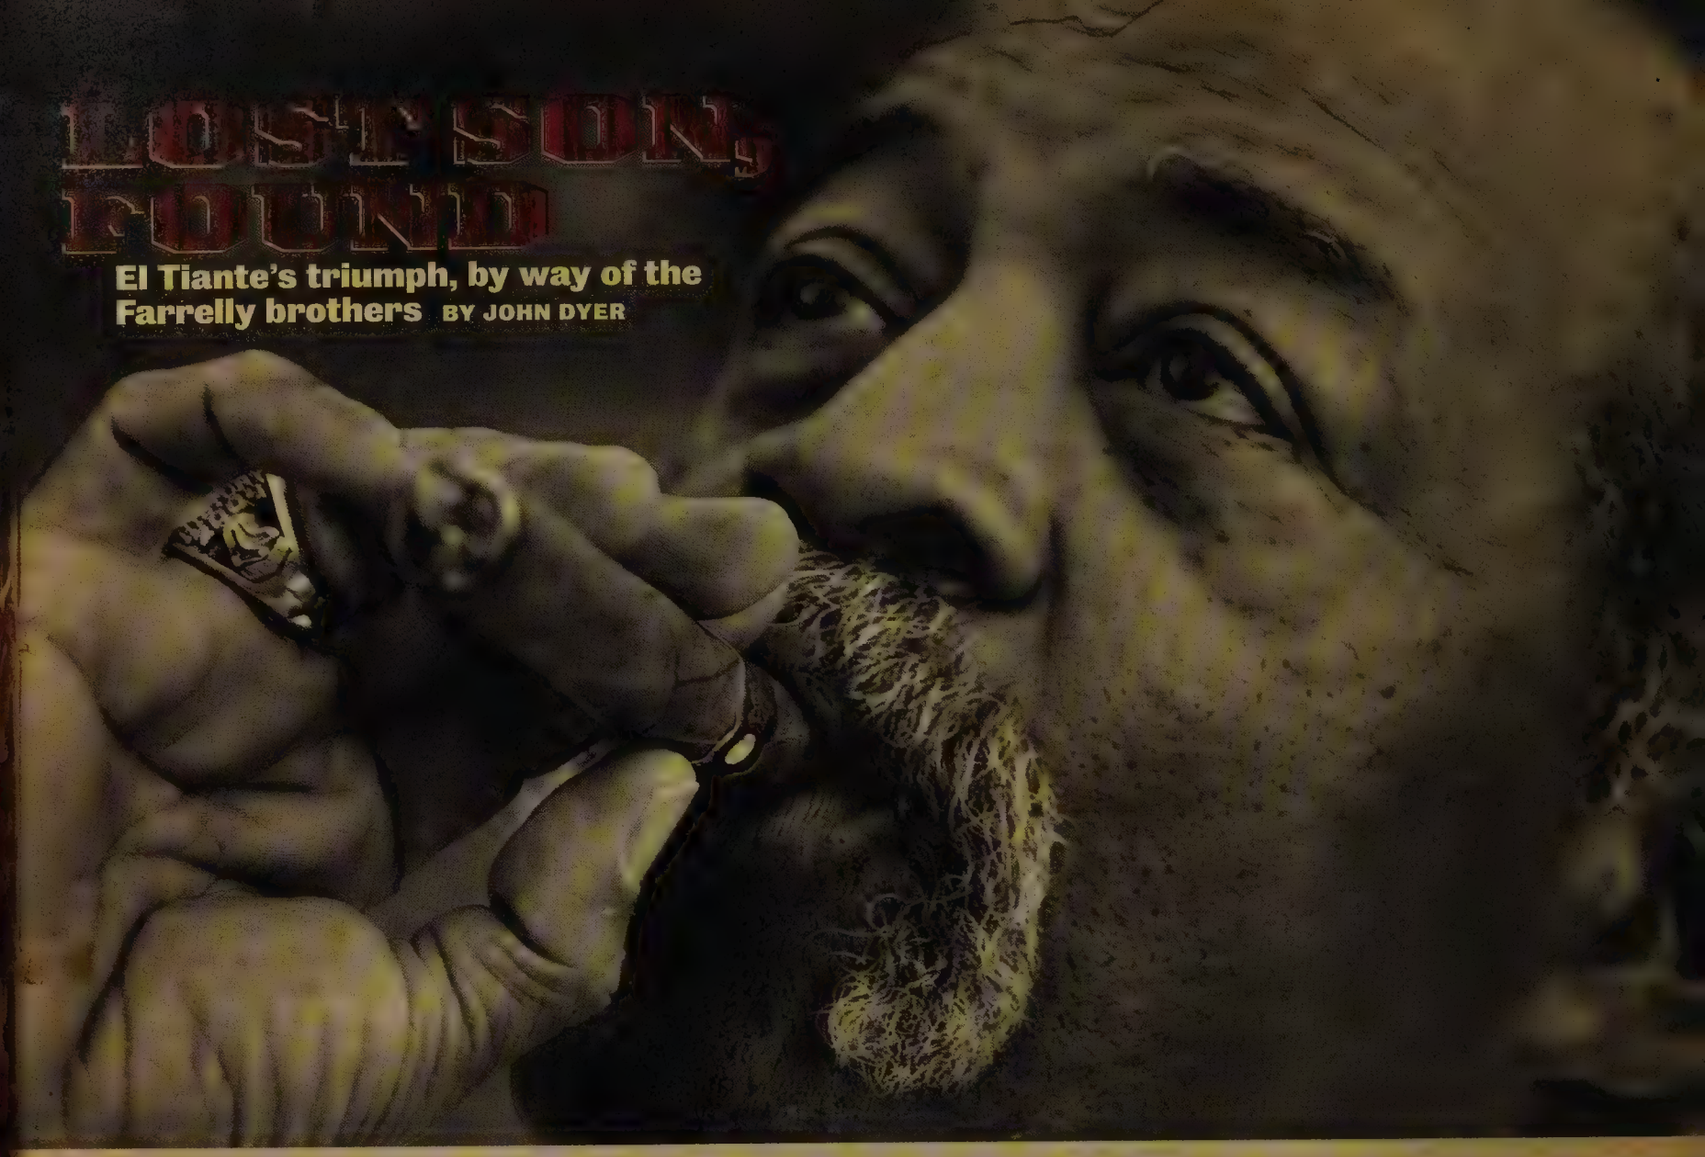


The pitching rotation looks set with Beckett, Dice-K, Lester and Wakefield. It remains to be seen who takes the mound every fifth day, but there are some palatable choices. Still, the Sox no longer have a truly fearsome power-hitter. And they need one. Papi is great, but an injury-plagued Papi with no Manny in the lineup isn't a two-headed home run monster. Nobody on the Red Sox hit 30 home runs last year. In the three years prior, Manny and Papi averaged nearly 40 dingers per year—each.

Now, there are enough players tainted by steroids that suspicion is landing everywhere (My, Manny, what baggy uniforms you wear...). Basically, if every team doesn't have a juicer on the roster, then they surely did at some point in the past 10 years. It's time to get over it and regard steroids as the product of a certain era. Is Mark McGwire any different than hippies who did LSD at Woodstock, or an ad executive who snorted coke off the scalp of a bald midget in a Miami nightclub circa 1989? No, he's not. This was bigger than any one player, which is why the Red Sox should extend an olive branch to a sad and misunderstood man by the name of Barry Bonds.

He's still out there. He still wants to play. And we'd wager that he'd probably still put up 30 home runs. But there's another reason to pick up Bonds.

With two recent championships, the Sox' objective is no longer just to win, but to do it in a way that gratuitously angers a Steinbrenner. Signing Bonds would accomplish that. Yes, he has a bad rep, but nothing that a week at Patriots training camp wouldn't fix. After they loan him to Belichick, Bonds will come back declaring, "I don't care about individual numbers; I just want to do what I can to help my team when I'm not busy signing autographs or lighting up the dugout with my positive attitude and goodwill toward the press."



Home runs are fun. Eccentric players are interesting. A little drama doesn't hurt. Let's hope the 2009 team picks a few fights and has a hilarious party photo end up on Facebook (we're counting on you, Pedroia). Sabermetrics is fine, but over 162 games, you also need some style points. ✖✖✖

LOST SON, FOUND

El Tiante's triumph, by way of the Farrelly brothers

BY JOHN DYER

IMAGINE IF NOMAR never had to leave. If Pedro wasn't greedy. If Manny wasn't always Manny. Now consider Ortiz. Recall Jim Rice. Visualize Yaz. Feeling warm and fuzzy? You're experiencing an iota of the good vibes Red Sox Nation used to generate when Luis Tiant took the mound.

With his trademark cigar, moustache and deadly arm, El Tiante was a beloved pitcher for the heroic 1975 Red Sox, starting in three games of the World Series, including No. 6, which ranks as one of the most exciting in postseason history. Yes, that contest against the Cincinnati Reds yielded another dream deferred, but memories of Tiant in the clutch gave sustenance to downtrodden Sox fans for years before the miracle of 2004.

Even as Bostonians continue to adore Tiant, however, many forget his backstory as a political refugee, an exile from his native Cuba. His contract purchased by the Cleveland Indians in 1961, Tiant stayed away as Fidel Castro cracked down on civil society in the wake of the Bay of Pigs' fiasco. Forty-six years later, he still hadn't gone back. How did it feel to be the adopted son of New England while he was persona non grata in his homeland? Thanks to filmmakers Peter and Bobby Farrelly, we now know.

The Lost Son of Havana, a documentary playing on April 25 at Independent Film Festival Boston, follows Tiant on his 2007 return to Cuba, an expedition the Farrellys proposed when they met the living legend while shooting Fever Pitch in 2004. "He told us he wanted to go back to Cuba before his days were done," Bobby Farrelly remembers. "We said, 'This is perfect for a documentary film.'"

Along with director Jonathan Hock and producer Kris Meyer, the Farrellys, who served as executive producers, embarked on a three-year odyssey for permission to enter Cuba. Ultimately, after Washington and Havana rejected their requests, the crew obtained entry by joining a humanitarian baseball squad. "We had to play fast-pitch baseball against some Cuban amateur teams," says Farrelly. "They just cleaned our clocks."

Lost Son is a tearjerker. Tiant, 68, returns to his old neighborhood in the Cuban capital, where his elderly, impoverished aunts are shocked as he walks through their door. His neighbors chide him for taking so long to visit. A throng of men permitted to assemble and speak freely in a city park as long as they only talk about baseball (remember, Castro was a pitcher) cluster around the aged athlete in awe. The proud Tiant is in his element. "To me, I feel like I'm born again," he reflects.

Interspersed with those moments are recollections of Tiant's up-and-down career. He learned baseball at the knee of his father, a talented Negro Leagues pitcher. A scapula injury forced him to slow his fastball and mix up his delivery to stump hitters. Always, his charisma was an asset. "Luis showed us how to be a major leaguer," says catcher Carlton Fisk in the film.

Farrelly harbors a special hope for Lost Son, too. Perhaps a film about Tiant's triumphant return to Cuba might help him gain admittance to another hallowed place. "I've always been bothered by the fact that he's not in the Baseball Hall of Fame," muses Farrelly. "He's probably the best player who's not." ✖✖✖

DOES ART ENHANCE reality or reflect it? Does technology contribute to art? Can art exist in virtual reality? Nobody can answer those questions fully, but from April 24 to May 10, the folks at the sixth biennial Boston Cyberarts Festival will try anyway. Billing itself as the "largest collaboration of artists working in new technologies in all media in North America," and housed in venues throughout the city, suburbs and Second Life, the festival is hosting visual art shows, music, dance performances and more. Highlights include an exhibit at the Goethe-Institut on Beacon Street that uses interactive computer graphics for a 3D tour of the Berlin Wall and a dance recital at the MIT Museum inspired by "Loops," a digital portrait of modernist choreographer Merce Cunningham. It's probably the first art event you'll attend where tweets are encouraged.

AMANDA FAKHREDDINE

The Boston Cyberarts Festival takes place from April 24 to May 10 at venues throughout the city. Go to bostoncyberarts.org or call 617-524-8495 for dates, times and locations.

High School Musical

De-Flower Power Before Disney fooled everyone into thinking high schoolers were squeaky clean and enjoyed the occasional musical interlude, playwright Frank Wedekind's Spring Awakening offered a more intimate look into the minds of randy coeds. Set in 19th-century Germany, the musical adaptation of his drama boasts a Grammy-winning rock score and deals with more coming-of-age issues than an afterschool special. And while the Broadway version plays April 28–May 24 at the Colonial Theatre, the Zeitgeist Stage Company performs the original at the Boston Center for the Arts April 17–May 9. Either way, if push came to shove and the casts decided to take on the Disney darlings, our money's on these angsty Euros roughing up Zac Efron's weave. Just saying.

Coraline ★★★ Neil Gaiman's psychologically spiky novella gets a fairly faithful rendering from gifted stop-motion animator Henry Selick, who previously tickled eyeballs with his beloved The Nightmare Before Christmas and the terrific but underrated James and the Giant Peach. Voiced without much gusto by Dakota Fanning, our title lass is a neglected only child who happens upon a secret tunnel leading to an alternate universe where doppelgängers of her distracted parents are suddenly affectionate and doting. Of course, they do have buttons for eyes, but that's probably the least creepy thing about them. A psychedelic trip down a dark rabbit hole of youthful anxieties, Coraline is never less than a visual marvel, even when Gaiman's leaps of dream-logic become more head-scratching than mind-blowing. If you have the option, I'd check out the 3-D version, which wisely foregoes the usual gimmicky gotcha effects and instead uses the wondrous Real D technology to further envelop you in Selick's richly detailed, carefully rendered world. Also, it's nice to see a heroic cat, for a change. (In the suburbs.)

Duplicity ★★★ ½ Tony Gilroy's sophomore feature is so breezy with classic Hollywood charm, one might not even notice how cynical it is. Clive Owen stars as an MI6 sellout who ditched Her Majesty's secret service for a more lucrative career spying on frozen-pizza patent disputes. He's got a bad history with Julia Roberts' CIA bombshell, and Gilroy's film rather ingeniously eliminates any real-world stakes in setting these two working at cross-purposes for vainglorious lotion CEOs played by Tom Wilkinson and the amazing Paul Giamatti. Or are they up to something else entirely? Leapfrogging back and forth through time, Duplicity is a tricky, sophisticated affair that demands your undivided attention. The giddiness comes from the pleasure these actors take in Gilroy's dialogue, whether it's his rapid-fire banter or some juicy sidewinding monologues. Telling lies for a living takes a toll, and Duplicity asks: How do you love someone after you've discovered they're as full of crap as you are? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Fast & Furious ★★★ Forget Brokeback Mountain. The best male love story of recent years was 2001's street-racing sleeper The Fast and the Furious, wherein Vin Diesel and Paul Walker ignored their girlfriends and made goo-goo eyes at one another while driving 120 mph. (There hadn't been such a gleefully homoerotic courtship in a blockbuster since Iceman snapped his teeth at Maverick in Top Gun.) Their careers in shambles, the original cast has reunited for this fourth installment of this guilty-pleasure franchise, which characteristically favors speed over logic and demonstrates a sly awareness of its own absurdity. Diesel's outlaw driver again teams up with Walker's undercover Fed, and they eye each other longingly while taking down a drug lord drag racing heroin shipments on the Mexican border. Deftly directed by Justin Lin, it's campy, turbo-charged nonsense. But how can you resist recurring shots of Diesel folding his Popeye arms in front of a towering, pumping oil rig. Paging Dr. Freud! (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Gomorrah ★★ Matteo Garrone's pitiless expose of Italy's Neapolitan Mafia is full of despair and sobering statistics. Unlike their romanticized neighbors in Sicily's La Cosa Nostra, the Camorra has no illusions about tradition, honor or any of that Don Corleone junk. There's nothing here but money and murder. Working from a best seller by Roberto Saviano (who shares a screenwriting credit) Garrone traces this vile gang's reach through every level of society, from everyday street toughs, through haute couture sweatshops, all the way to toxic-waste dumps that poison an already dying community. But while Gomorrah is structurally impressive, it's also emotionally inert. Admirably avoiding sentimental mob movie clichés, Garrone forgets to offer anything in their place. The movie is a sociological study taken from such a jaundiced distance that there's nothing for us to latch onto. The characters are nasty, shallow people whose inevitable deaths come as a relief to the audience. Sure it's informative and well researched, but it's a grind. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Gran Torino ★★★ ½ A throwback to Clint Eastwood's cheap and dirty '80s crowd-pleasers, Gran Torino looks like it was shot over the course of a long weekend and cost about $15 to make. It's also extremely entertaining. Eastwood plays a growling, bigoted Korean War vet who gradually warms to a family of Hmong immigrants living next door. As he sputters, spits and cusses his way through scenes, this mean, old dog learns a few new tricks. The movie is pitched at the same hyperbolic level

ENJOY THE RIDE

Adventureland

Abbot Genser

A FAMILIAR STORY TOLD with surprising delicacy, Greg Mottola's autobiographical Adventureland feels at times like a John Hughes movie directed by François Truffaut.

On the surface, it's your typical "summer that changed my life" comedy about a bookish young man learning hard lessons on the way to ditching his virginity. But the laughter is weirdly muted, and there's a sense of rueful longing undercutting the farce. At heart, this is the story of a kid discovering that the world is really a much smaller, sadder place than he'd ever imagined.

Jesse Eisenberg (who, after Roger Dodger, The Squid and the Whale and now this, has carved out a nice niche as a writer's onscreen incarnation) stars as James Brennan, a pompous recent college grad who finds all his grand plans scuttled once his boozy father gets demoted and can't foot the bills anymore. James has no choice but to get a job, which is trickier than you'd expect for a Renaissance studies major with no work experience.

So he arrives at the titular Pittsburgh theme park, a ramshackle den of enforced gaiety staffed by bleary-eyed drug users and assorted dysfunctional depressives. Boss Bobby (Bill Hader) and his dim-bulb wife (Kristin Wiig) preside over the day-to-day drudgery with panicked, phony enthusiasm. As the summer wears on, their barn-door-broad SNL performances slowly modulate, revealing depths of disappointment to match the movie's melancholy tone.

Our pontificating hero gets stranded in the dread games section, joylessly enticing patrons to partake in poorly rigged tests of skill. The sum total of his training is that he must "never let anybody win a giant panda," as the park is running low on them.

Freaks and Geeks fans will be thrilled to see Martin Starr as James' burned-out mentor, Joel. Joel is the kind of guy who smokes a pipe because he thinks it makes him look cool, and awkwardly offers a Gogol paperback as a morning-after gift to a floozy who mistakenly made out with him. Much like Starr's immortal Geek character, Joel faces life like it's one big argument he already knows he's lost.

Adventureland is like Superbad with the awkward moments intact and all the farcical romps cut out.

The lone, bright spot in James' summer is Kristen Stewart's willowy Em, a teetering, drunken tart-tongued mess who sets his heart aflame and caused something close to anaphylactic shock in a certain film critic who shall remain nameless. She's the kind of aching disaster you'd give anything to rescue, like she walked into the movie straight from the Hold Steady's lyrics.

Still, James has no idea that Em has been carrying on with Adventureland's married maintenance man. Ryan Reynolds at last stares down the shallowness of his fake–Chevy Chase persona, as the fading lothario who prides himself on made-up stories about jamming with Lou Reed and bringing his underage conquests to the pull-out couch in his mother's basement. Credit Mottola for cashing in on this annoying actor's shiny fundamental bankruptcy, granting him dimensions of tawdry grandeur as he prattles on for 15-year-olds about "rocking with Lou on 'Shed a Light on Love.'"

If you don't get that particular joke, Adventureland is going to feel like a long haul. The pitch-perfect 1987 milieu is a character in its own right, and any soundtrack on which Falco's "Rock Me Amadeus" holds its own next to the Replacements and the New York Dolls is an album you're going to want to buy.

Rewatching Mottola's triumphant Superbad recently, I was struck by the notion that all the Seth Rogen–penned, envelope-pushing raunch wasn't aging particularly well. And yet, the movie still holds up as an end-of-a-friendship vignette to rival Alfonso Cuarón's Y Tu Mama Tambien. Adventureland is like Superbad with the awkward moments intact and all the farcical romps cut out.

Once the summer's gone, so are James' illusions. The park allows him to move forward as older and, if not wiser, at least a bit more weary. Sure, this is an old song but it's one worth hearing again, especially when it's so deeply felt. ✖✖✖ as Eastwood's oversized turn. Designed as his farewell to acting, the movie plays like catnip for longtime fans. There's a valedictory air to the work, studded with explicit references to characters like Harry Callahan, Gunny Highway and Josey Wales. Like his other films, Gran Torino has some satisfying shades of moral uncertainty lurking beneath the surface. But viewers will also get a giddy thrill of seeing a 78-year-old badass pulling a gun on gangbangers and snarling, "Get off my lawn." (In the suburbs.)

He's Just Not That Into You ★★ ½ Unexpectedly tough-minded and insightful for a fair stretch of its running time, director Ken Kwapis' adaptation of Greg Behrendt and Liz Tuccillo's best-selling self-help book starts out with both feet planted firmly on the ground instead of head over heels. The film takes a dim view of the dating scene, as Ginnifer Goodwin's high-strung serial clinger learns some hard lessons from Justin Long's bartender lothario. There's a surprisingly eccentric turn from Jennifer Connelly as a suspicious housewife whose hubby (Bradley Cooper) is enjoying too many late-night yoga lessons with Scarlett Johansson. Even Ben Affleck and Jennifer Aniston are decent for a change, playing a long-term couple wondering what it really means to be married. How infuriating then to watch the last half hour undercut the previous 90 minutes of bitter truths. Shoehorning these characters into one sappy Hollywood ending after another and selling itself short for chick-flick clichés, He's Just Not That Into You cops out and decides that he really is. (At Boston Common, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Hunger ★★ Set in Northern Ireland's Maze prison during the 1981 hunger strike, video artist Steve McQueen's austere debut feature has little interest in stirring your political passions or even saying much at all about the life and death of fabled martyr Bobby Sands. The movie is more like a non-narrative accumulation of physical details, ranging from disgusting to deeply upsetting. Sands doesn't even appear onscreen for the first 30 minutes, as McQueen viscerally lingers on the prison's daily beatings—or "interrogations"—while taking a rather unseemly visual interest in the quantities of excrement smeared on the walls. McQueen's cocky art-punk aesthetic undercuts the film's only human sequence: a 17-minute philosophical debate between Sands and his parish priest distractingly rendered in a single shot. The rest of the picture feels like an endurance test, all ghastly close-ups of withering bodies and urine drenched corridors. Hunger shocks and revolts, but from such a careful aesthetic distance, there's no emotional resonance to the horror. (At Kendall Square.)

The International ★★ ½ At least Tom Tykwer's expertly crafted piece of ridiculous hokum has timing on its side. What's more apt for our current financial times than a thriller in which the villain is a bank? A smoldering Clive Owen gives his all as an Interpol agent hard on the heels of the dastardly International Bank of Business and Credit. Logic is in short supply, as we're repeatedly informed that this sinister organization has infiltrated and corrupted every level of government in every country around the world, but somehow its financial future seems to hinge on a small-potatoes arms deal with a tinhorn third-world dictator. But it's hard to care about coherence when you can sit back and marvel at Tykwer's bravura set-pieces. The German-born director of Run Lola Run has a knack for kinetic energy. The film's centerpiece sequence is a 14-minute cat-and-mouse scene in the Guggenheim Museum that explodes into the best shootout since Michael Mann's Heat. (At Harvard Square.)

Muscle Cars

Vin Diesel and Michelle Rodriguez reunite in Justin Lin's Fast and Furious.

Knowing ★ M. Night Shyamalan doesn't have to feel so ashamed anymore. Dopey even by the relaxed standards of Nicolas Cage movies, Alex Proyas' dunderheaded doomsday tale casts the over-actor as a grieving MIT professor prone to hysteria and fits of atheistic petulance. This presents a problem when his young son happens upon a 50-year-old piece of notebook paper containing numerical codes for every man-made or natural disaster from the past five decades, which leaves the boozed-up Dr. Nic to unlock the exact time and place of the impending apocalypse. Around the margins are a bunch of blond guys in trench coats looking like refugees from the 80s' band Wang Chung and attempting to abduct children for mysterious purposes. Knowing is ridiculous and offensive, smuggling a fear-mongering religious agenda into multiplexes beneath a veneer of CGI effects and disaster porn. Cage's comical caterwauling can only distract for so long, and the film eventually feels like the big-budget version of one of Kirk Cameron's Left Behind movies. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Monsters Vs. Aliens ★★★ Like a snarky little offshoot of Pixar's crew of bona fide artistes, DreamWorks Animation tends to specialize in pop-culture references and dated inside jokes aimed at the long-suffering parents in the audience. Its latest endeavor will never be confused with Wall-E, but at least it's a cohesive piece that boasts a charmingly 50s' retro sensibility and some dazzling 3-D effects. Reese Witherspoon voices an unlucky bride struck by a meteorite, now horrified to find herself growing seven stories tall and quarantined in a secret government facility with a bunch of icky monsters. Once aliens attack, these outcasts become America's last line of defense. There's some very funny voice work by Hugh Laurie as the world's smartest cockroach, while Seth Rogen is typecast as an amorphous, dimwitted blob. As was bound to happen sooner or later, Stephen Colbert plays the president. See the IMAX 3-D presentation, which distracts from any screenwriting weaknesses with a healthy dose of eye candy. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Observe and Report ★★ ½ For anybody who thought Taxi Driver just wasn't funny enough, writer/director Jody Hill's sophomore effort works a sick comedic riff on Scorsese and DeNiro's seminal antihero. Except this time Travis Bickle is played by Seth Rogen, and he's a mall security guard. Paul Blart this is not. Rogen bravely throws himself into the role of a delusional bully taking a break from his prescription medicines just long enough to grow dangerously obsessed with rescuing Anna Faris' dim cosmetics girl from a serial flasher. There's a thin line between hilarious and creepy, and it's a line Observe and Report seems proud to ignore. Much like Hill's cult favorite The Foot Fist Way, it's a tale of puffed-up machismo mocked by an indifferent suburban wasteland. The commitment to mortification grates on the nerves, but at least it's a distinct vision. Then comes the climax, a sequence so magnificently sustained with a punch line so wrong it's impossible not to forgive just about everything that came before. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Sunshine Cleaning ★★ Misleadingly sold as a wacky romp from the people who brought you Little Miss Sunshine, director Christine Jeffs' latest is a muted, melancholy affair with strong performances from Amy Adams and Emily Blunt. The two play depressingly dysfunctional sisters who start their own crime-scene cleanup business as a way to stave off poverty. At least for a little while, the movie boasts a plainspoken sadness and a poignant sense of day-to-day drudgery. But first-timer Megan Holley's screenplay isn't content to leave well enough alone, piling on predictable late-movie revelations and a rash of melodramatic contrivances that only serve to undercut the acting. The great Alan Arkin phones this one in by recycling his goofy grandpa shtick to diminishing returns. He belongs in a different movie, one that's taking place hundreds of miles away from Adams' sorrowful smile. Sunshine Cleaning's patently false, upbeat ending feels not just like a cheat, but a betrayal. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Waltham Embassy and in the suburbs.)

Taken ★★ ½ Here's another slick, lurid thriller from writer/producer Luc Besson in which the French director employs his trademark blend of brutal action sequences and mawkish sentimentality. It's a tricky mix that Besson got just right in 1994's The Professional, but he's found diminishing returns ever since. Liam Neeson stars as a retired CIA assassin turned overprotective dad. He blanches at his precious teenage daughter's wishes to follow U2 across Europe, and it turns out father really does knows best, because young Kim (Maggie Grace) has barely stepped off the plane in Paris when she's kidnapped by snarling Albanian sex traffickers. What follows is a brisk procession of ass-whoopings, with towering, tree-trunk Neeson snapping limbs and tossing corpses all along the Seine. It's completely preposterous and more than a little stupid, but director Pierre Morel knows his way around a fight sequence, and his burly leading man injects a surprising gravitas to a one-note, Jack Bauer knockoff. Neeson's early monologue, threatening his daughter's kidnappers, is itself almost worth the price of admission. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Two Lovers ★★★ ½ Awash in romantic ambivalence and pained, inarticulated yearning, director James Gray's roiling melodrama should probably be considered ridiculous. While I concede that the film is fairly absurd and overwrought, I also found it impossible not to be swept up in its gonzo sincerity, tickled by the eccentric humor and dazzled by Gray's lush stretches of cinematic elegance. Joaquin Phoenix stars as a heartsick, bumbling mess who recently reclaimed his childhood bedroom in his parents' insular Brighton Beach neighborhood. He quickly finds himself courted by Vinessa Shaw's nurturing model of stability, but also pulled by the allure of Gwyneth Paltrow's druggy, shiksa basket case. Boasting a bold, go-for-broke performance by Phoenix and some uncharacteristically rough-edged work from Paltrow, the operatic Two Lovers allows its performers to conjure the heedless rush of true romance, while Gray's directorial rigor keeps the proceedings detached and clear-eyed enough to question whether their ardor is the effect of immature delusion. (In the suburbs.)

Watchmen ★★ ½ A landmark 12-volume doorstop written by Alan Moore, Watchmen is something like the Finnegan's Wake of superhero comics. Filmmakers like Terry Gilliam, Darren Aronofsky and Paul Greengrass have all tried and failed to adapt it over the years, leaving 300 director Zack Snyder stuck wrestling Watchmen's meaty monologues and massive backstory into a crowd-pleasing blockbuster entertainment. He gets about halfway there. Set in an alternate 1985, in which Nixon is serving his fifth term and the Cold War is heating up, the tangled tale finds a long-dormant band of caped crusaders spurred back into action by the murder of one of their own. The screenplay is undone by the stubborn density of the source material as it takes the film over an hour just to establish the players and their histories before the story can even get started. I doubt it will even make any sense to anyone who hasn't read the comic. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Gangsta's Paradise

South Side Story Whatever happened to the good ol' brawls of the Sharks and the Jets? The reality is far less musical and leotarded. In South Central L.A., located only miles from affluent Beverly Hills, rival gangs act out a tragic cycle of murder and revenge over seemingly trivial things like wearing the wrong color. Narrated by Oscar-winner Forest Whitaker, Stacy Peralta's documentary Crips and Bloods: Made in America delves into the history and nature of this present-day civil-war. Head to the Boston Public Library on April 18 to view the film and gain some understanding of the stakes. After the screening, join a group discussion organized by Boston Cares. No matter what letters you spell with your fingers, no matter what color bandana you wear, this film aims to inspire peace. Scott Greenan

OPEN SEASON

Pop trio Peter Bjorn and John pulls cinematic moods from sonic grab bag

Peter Bjorn and John plays the Paradise Rock Club April 28.

NO WHISTLING. That was a conscious decision for Peter Bjorn and John's new CD Living Thing. You can't blame the Swedish pop trio, given the hype over "Young Folks," the ubiquitous 2007 single with the whistled melody that's heard everywhere from Grey's Anatomy to covers by James Blunt and Kanye West.

Otherwise, Living Thing only builds on the sleek mash of catchy, cinematic sounds and styles that made Writer's Block one of 2007's more intriguing indie-pop albums.

"Anything goes," singer/guitarist Peter Morén says. "No idea is too dumb.

We record a lot of stuff that we take away. But then a lot of things stick." Just a few effects that stuck on the new disc were a popped balloon, a ripped piece of paper and a struck matchbox, he says. "Anything can make a good sound if you put a bit of reverb on it."

Some ideas even have history. "Just the Past" opens with a simple piano melody that Morén created at age 5—and his mother recorded. "You should always remember your ideas," he says. "You never know when they're going to fit in."

It helps that PB+J cobbles its sounds with orchestral precision, drawing on drummer John Eriksson's classical grounding and bassist Björn Yttling's technical finesse (he's also a producer for Lykki Li and other Swedish acts) as well as Morén's knack for classic pop hooks. "It's a bit all over the place," the singer says. "We play around and switch instruments. We're not stuck in our roles."

> "No idea is too dumb. We record a lot of stuff that we take away. But then a lot of things stick."

In turn, when the three musicians hit the studio to record Living Thing, they brought mix CDs spanning such diverse influences as Abba, Snoop Dog, Paul Simon's Graceland, Jorge Ben, Mission of Burma, New Order and Depeche Mode.

"It was good to have a source of reference to go back to when you talk about arrangements or sounds," says Morén, whose band plays the Paradise Rock Club on April 28 and opens for Depeche Mode at the Comcast Center on July 31.

All three members write and sing, and Morén says they sketch out melodies and lyrics before opening their songs to various approaches. But it's still an opposite route from artists who sequester themselves from outside influences. "For us, that's just impossible," Morén says from his Stockholm home. "We're geeky in that way, but why not? You want to create music because you love [listening to] music."

The broad influence of those mix CDs can be traced through the South African township-jive feel of "Living Thing," the hip-hop pulse of "Nothing to Worry About" (a ditty complete with a chirpy children's chorus that Kanye West championed on his blog) and the synthetic beats of "It Don't Move Me," which should blend right in on the Depeche Mode tour.

"We tapped into a lot of stuff that was on the radio in the mid '80s when we grew up," says Morén, 32, whose winsome singing voice bears some resemblance to John Lennon's.

He and Yttling met in their teen years, shared an interest in British shoegazer rock and began making music together. But they found complete chemistry when they added Eriksson in 1999, making two other albums before Writer's Block took off on the wings of "Young Folks." That sudden success led Morén to abandon his studies to become a librarian, while Eriksson reset his priorities as a classical percussionist.

Some critics have described Living Thing as more downbeat, likely focusing on its synth-pop moods and atmospheric beats. "We sought to create something not deliberately downbeat," Morén says, "but spooky and a bit unreal."

The band has added a synthesizer onstage. But apart from a stagehand who occasionally plays bongos, PB+J prefers to spin its web as a three-piece, with Eriksson triggering samples from his electronic drum pads. "Some people think we use backing tracks, but we would never do that," Morén says. "We like to improvise and play around with songs."

And that goes for "Young Folks" as well—usually as an encore. "Lately we've been doing it a bit Curtis Mayfield with the falsetto," Morén says. "It would be boring to play it like the record every time, but it's a great song and people like it, so I don't have a problem with that—as long as they try to listen to the rest of the music too!" ✖✖✖

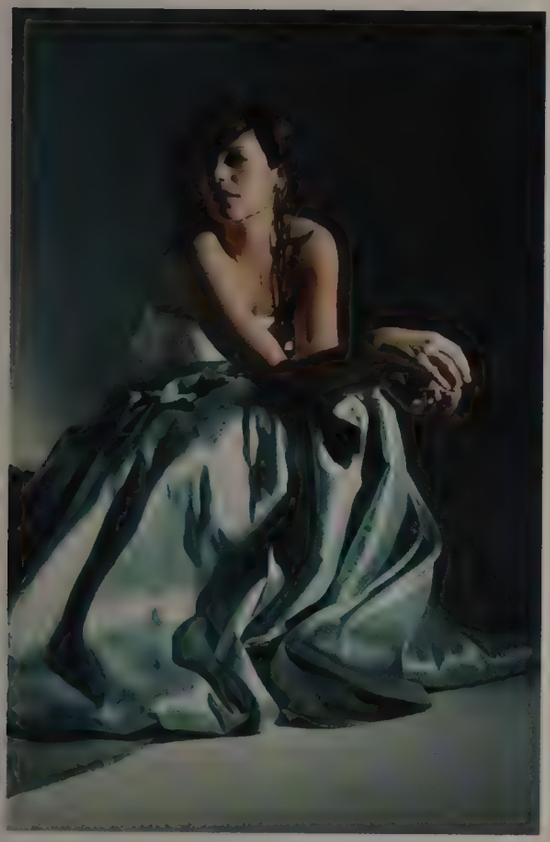
for homes with hot water or steam radiator heat

If a home doesn't have forced air heat, installing ductwork for central air conditioning can mean major remodeling and expense. But a Unique Indoor Comfort ® system doesn't require large metal ductwork,or major remodeling.

Cool air is delivered through small 2" flexible tubing that can easily be weaved through walls and ceilings, around studs and other obstacles. All that's visible are small round outlets in every room. What's more, Unique Indoor Comfort ® offers Lennox high efficiency equipment.



Proven in thousands of homes, easy to install Unique Indoor Comfort ® is the central air conditioning solution for the older home.

Monsters Vs. Allen

Still Alright In pop culture, Lily Allen spells trouble. Initially a MySpace phenomenon, the British singer was introduced to the wider public in 2006, when she released her first album Alright, Still on the popular Web site. Like her British peer Amy Winehouse, Allen conquered the top charts and developed a reputation that feeds tabloids and gossip blogs on a daily basis. Although constantly fighting media criticism about her erratic behavior, the singer's talent is undeniable. It's Not Me It's You, her second album, features catchy tunes and embraces genres from country to pop. Whether dishing about past relationships or ordering Chinese food, Allen's intriguing lyrics describe the reality of a girl who grew up to be famous. Currently on tour, the performer keeps in touch with her fans via Twitter, where she also picks fights with frenemy blogger Perez Hilton. See Lily Allen in person at the House of Blues on April 19. Thais Collins

In the Flesh

Performing Art

Argentina is known for its rich cultural heritage, tasty beef and ambitious female politicians. In her exhibition En Carne Viva at the Center for Latino Arts, Romina Diaz Brarda displays her colorful and rapturous paintings of life in the streets of Buenos Aires. Movement, emotion and energy abound as figures revel in their bodies and surroundings. Take this artistic jaunt to South America through April 29 and experience it for yourself.

Before Lance, even before LeMond, there was the PMC, a 190-mile bike-a-thon that brought cycling to the American consciousness. Since 1980, the PMC has raised almost $240 million for cancer research. Today, 100 percent of every rider-raised dollar goes directly to that cause.

PMC 2009 – August 1 & 2
6,000 cyclists from 36 states and 6 countries will ride. Last year, the PMC raised $35 million for cancer research at the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. Are you ready to take the Pan Mass Challenge?

ATTENTION BOUNTY HUNTERS! BONUS POINTS TO ANYONE WHO CAN CAPTURE AN IMPROPER READER DRESSED UP LIKE MY COUSIN VINNY AT THE WORLD GRITS FESTIVAL HELD APRIL 17–19 IN ST. GEORGE, S.C.

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip. Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.

Jarett Karp grabbed a photo with Celtics guard Eddie House in Memphis, while House fought off the temptation to hurl Karp at the basket.

While vacationing in Aruba, David Everett brought us to an oceanside dinner at the Flying Fishbone. Wow! What a beautiful, majestic… magazine.

Vatche Demirjian was in London for the changing of the Queen's Life Guard. In a perfect world, the visit would've been followed by a changing of Demirjian's shirt.

THE IMPROPER got some face time with Rebecca Robinson, also known as Miss Texas 2008. Either that, or someone at the sash-making company has some serious explaining to do.

All three issues have a special distribution of 100,000 copies, 15,000 more than usual

A CLOSING-TIME ROAST

How Much Is That Toddler in the Window?

Beantown got hit with a bit of tinsel when a gaggle of Hollywood types descended on the Boston Harbor Hotel for the 2009 Auction for Access Sport America.

The organization, which helps disabled kids participate in extreme sports like windsurfing and Hawaiian outrigger canoeing, attracted such high-wattage high rollers as Oscar nominee (and Emmy winner) James Woods, Oscar winner Chris Cooper, his writer/actor wife, Marianne Leone Cooper (who was on The Sopranos), producer Dot Aufiero and TV doc Timothy Johnson, who all upped the glamour quotient considerably but also mingled with the crowd like they were just regular folks.

Also on hand: redheaded media cutie Mariellen Burns, the stunning Susan Halby, babe-a-licious blonde Lynn Dale and the dapper Frank Wisneski, absurdly handsome chef Tony Ambrose, the indomitable Barbara Talalian and party pair Victoria and Rich Fisher, who bid on auction items like a week at a posh house on the Vineyard, lunch in the North End with James Woods and a stroll down the red carpet at the premiere of Cooper's new movie.

For entertainment, the Holy Fools played country and western tunes like "All My Exes Live in Texas," while Cooper and Woods posed for photos with seemingly every person in the room.

The evening's most arch remark: When a baby began crying during the live auction, one guest hissed, "I'll bid $2,000 for someone to shut that kid up."

Last Call...

What's left to say about legendary Boston icon Eddie Doyle? Apparently plenty, judging by the speeches that were given during his retirement party at the Hampshire House. For 35 years, Doyle worked as a bartender downstairs at the Bull and Finch Pub and served as the inspiration for the TV show Cheers.

On hand to roast and toast him were such local luminaries as former mayor Ray Flynn, egalitarian artist Sidewalk Sam, comrade in arms Tommy Leonard and cancer crusader Scott Neely, along with what seemed like several thousand other people, who presented Doyle with gifts ranging from a U.S. flag that flew over a military base in Afghanistan to a $10 gift certificate to the Quarterdeck in Falmouth.

Everyone seemed to be in the mood to give advice. For example, when I mentioned to Sidewalk Sam that I'd recently taken a life-drawing class, he said, "All you have to do is remember to put the nipples on," while another guest told Doyle, who was nervous about speaking to the crowd, "They say you're supposed to picture everyone in the room naked, but with this crowd, I wouldn't recommend it."

The long and short of all the speeches: Doyle is an amazing character who's raised millions of dollars for local charities and never said no to a good cause or asked for any recognition.

What nobody mentioned was that he also poured a helluva drink.

In the Bag...

It was a bit like alphabet soup: the BAC at the BCA.

The Gala Preview party for AD 20/21: Art and Design of the 20th and 21st Centuries was held at the Boston Center for the Arts to benefit the Boston Architectural College.

Present and accounted for were such swells as design guru David Webster, beautiful Brazilian Selwa Smith, rug dealer Jeff Arcari, decorators to the über-fabulous Michael Barnum and AJ Schnopp III, threads peddlers Alan and Be Bilzerian, celebrity chef Lydia Shire, Colombian cutie Carlos Escobar, and one board member who excused himself by saying, "I have to go find rich people and give them a squeeze."

Meanwhile, one woman said, "I only wear black, which means that in the summer, I can't go to Wellesley because they all think I'm going to kidnap their children."

However, the funniest comments involved vintage handbags.

"I mean, really. Has it come to this?" said one guest, while another looked at a $40,000 Chanel purse and said, "Why would you spend that kind of money on something you can't either drive or live in?" ✖✖✖

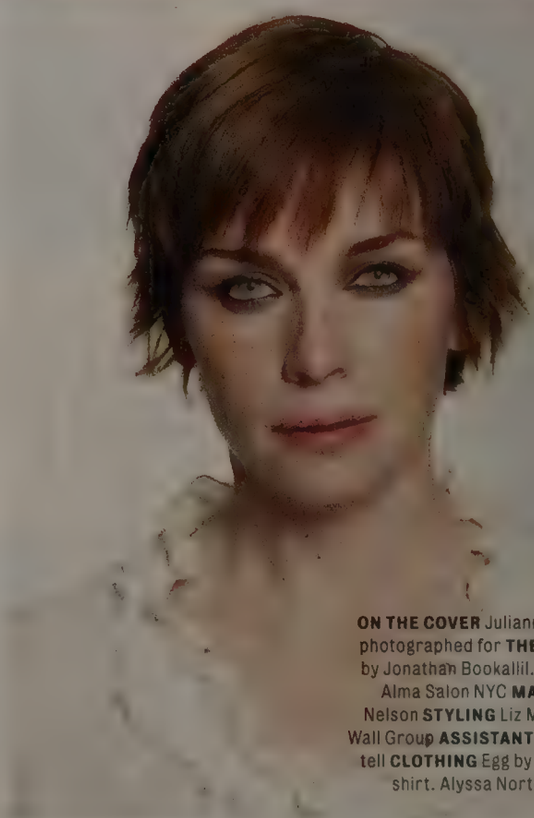
OMISSION
"Go With the Flow" in the April 15 issue was written by Ruth Basloe and photographed by Kim Kennedy of ksquaredstudios.com.

Decadence? What Decadence?

You can put lipstick on a pig, drape her in Givenchy, give her clarinet lessons and force her to listen to the audiotapes for all seven volumes of À la Recherche du Temps Perdu, and all you get is an abused pig. But give a pig a bag of enriched animal feed, and you've got a happy, productive member of society. Not to mention an excellent loin roast.

Of course, modern culture isn't a sack of corn pellets. Sure, cynics may say we're just 300 million people standing around with our eyes closed, humming commercial jingles and pretending that the color of our iPods makes us special. Not true. American culture is rich beyond measure. That's because it's predicated upon one thing alone: belief that the next guy over is an uncultured pig. That's called individualism.



The point is, a future archaeologist's notes might read something like this:

"The material culture of the American Middle Decadent Phase (historically known as the Age of Octomom) was complex, even though fossils show signs of cerebral bleeding from exposure to Bob's Discount Furniture advertisements. The arts, blogging and pornography all flowered, however, with the invention of low-calorie energy drinks."

Personally, I think owning a black iPod makes you brooding and intellectual.

A HOUSE UNITED

THE LATE, GREAT French architect Le Corbusier described a house as a "machine for living." Boston-based architect David Hacin reverses that logic. Housing, he says, makes the city more human. "I want architecture that is carefully scaled and relates to people," he says. "We don't live in an anonymous place."

Hacin's design for FP3, a new mixed-use development on Congress Street near the Fort Point Channel, testifies to his philosophy of architecture bringing diverse groups of people together and fostering creativity.

Cited recently by the American Institute of Architects as among the best new housing in the country, FP3 is a postmodern hybrid of renovated brick warehouses topped by a glass and copper penthouse. The building contains condos—including artist studio residences—an art gallery and Barbara Lynch's Sportello and Drink.

"We worked with the existing buildings and adapted them to new uses and created a new vitality," beams 47-year-old Hacin, an American born and raised in Switzerland. He settled in Boston after his studies at Harvard's Graduate School of Design in the mid-1980s.

FP3's concept is for lawyers and painters to rub elbows and meet for cocktails on-site, thereby enriching city life. A modest goal, perhaps, but in Boston, where architecture tends to privilege the past at the expense of the present, experiments like FP3 could be key to the city's future.

"We need to be adding our layer of history to Boston," Hacin insists. "Boston is not a 19th-century or a 20th-century city. Its future success will rely upon it being a 21st-century city."

JOHN DYER

Drink of the Moment

Winnie the Booze

Like babies, the first stage in creating a new cocktail is often the most enjoyable part of the process. Thinking of a name for the thing can be more difficult.

And so, after some after-hours experimentation, Estragon's Jen Starbird and Thomas Tietjen had a luscious mix of Chartreuse, St-Germaine and muddled green apples, but no ideas on what to call it. Inspiration came later when Starbird brought her English bulldog by for a visit.

Known for chomping at the windows in futile attempts to capture the ham once kept behind the bar, Winston is a favorite of Estragon co-owner Lara Gavigan. It was her suggestion to name the cocktail after him. It may have been the green sweater he was wearing at the time, or it could have been Winston's temperament, which Starbird describes as "vicious and sweet at the same time."

The same can be said for Chartreuse. "Some people like it and some don't, because it's very medicinal," Starbird explains. "It doesn't really play nice." Yet the sweetness from the apples and St-Germaine helps to belly rub the green monster into submission. As a result, the Winston ($9) is a well-balanced drink that bares its teeth but doesn't bite. But what does its namesake think? "He's strictly a High Life dog."

NICK ALTSCHULLER

Good Eats

Gorillas in the Twist

Nobody knows for sure how monkey bread, a knobby, pull-apart loaf, got its name. We'll assume it has something to do with the primate-ish way you use your hands to grab and gobble up the sticky dough balls. Like most of the other pastries at their petite European bakery, the version Alex Emmott and Evangeline McKilligan make is decidedly French: Rather than a Bundt pan stacked with puffy, sweet-shellacked donut holes, these mini loaf pans hold twisty, cinnamon-sugar-swirled hunks of dough so buttery, flaky and crackly crisp on top, they're unmistakably reminiscent of the croissants on the neighboring rack.

SKETCHY CHARACTER

Burlesque life drawing isn't as easy as you'd think.

ON EASTER SUNDAY, while many of you dined with your families and reflected on your blessings, I sat in the back of a dingy bar, drinking and ogling a topless woman, a sweaty hand stuffed into my pocket, groping for a fistful of singles.

It was Dr. Sketchy's Anti-Art School Burlesque Life Drawing, and in contrast to the name, the afternoon was the most wholesome time I've ever spent with half-naked women. Founded in Brooklyn in 2005, Dr. Sketchy's has spread worldwide, with 60 branches in cities like Cape Town, Bogotá, and on a couple of weekends per month, Allston. On a small stage in the back of a club, cheerful drag kings and queens pose in corsets or pasties. Should anyone walk in for a lazy Sunday pint, they're in for a shock. But on this particular Sunday, the sketchiest thing they saw was me.

Sketchy reason No. 1: I went alone. It was Easter, and all my friends were busy or just didn't feel like helping. So while two people at a burlesque drawing class is a fun afternoon, one guy arriving solo for some Sunday boobage is a sign of a life gone wrong.

Sketchy reason No. 2: It was windy, and when I arrived my hair resembled a toupee salvaged from a storm drain. I'm generally unkempt in the first place, but now I looked like a man who enjoys the feel of a good trench coat, mumbling to himself and living in a van.

Sketchy reason No. 3: I can't draw. Not a lick. Actually being able to produce something of artistic merit would have helped tone down my shadiness. Also: I didn't even bring paper. Never even occurred to me. So in I walked looking like a serial glue sniffer with no intention of doing anything but staring at bare flesh.

Thankfully, it's a friendly crowd at Dr. Sketchy's, and an older woman drinking a Scotch on the rocks gave me all the paper I needed. Nearly 20 people filtered in during the proceedings, from a group of women with cigar boxes full of supplies to a young man in the back who casually tossed off drawings I'm incapable of creating even in dreams where I have talent.

The session began with one-minute sketches, as a woman named "Johnny Blazes" slowly stripped out of her men's clothing. One minute isn't enough time to do more than a rudimentary outline, which I excelled at, but the allotments soon ratchet up to two, five and ultimately 20 minutes. Twenty minutes is a long friggin' time when you can't draw anything resembling the human form.

Scooting further into the corner, I decided to try different techniques, like only drawing negative space. When Johnny and a woman in mossy pasties named "M. Hanora" staged a 10-minute "surreal garden party," I scribbled out a patch of lead and drew with my eraser. When M. posed with a plunger on her butt, I went for firm, straight lines and ended up with a fetching little image I call "Woman With Plunger on Her Butt." Finally, I just took to drawing details, like the felt and googly-eyed face Johnny had glued to her underwear, until I realized I had spent 10 minutes glaring at her crotch. I just couldn't help looking shifty.

There's a fair amount of interaction during the session, as Johnny tells the story of how she broke a molar on a pita chip and familiar faces nod greetings while passing the tip bucket. The pervasive atmosphere is just good, clean fun. The comfortable crowd of regulars is simply happy for the creative exercise and the chance to show off the level of detail they achieved on M.'s booby tassels. I, on the other hand, hid my sheets like they held nuclear codes and quickly shuffled out the door. As the afternoon proved, I have no talent for drawing. But I have a gift for being sketchy. ✖✖✖

ELBOW ROOM

TO THE SHAVED-HEAD ahole in the Ray Allen Jersey: You were leaving the game with your buddies on Friday night while I was heading to my friend's birthday at the Harp. As I walked by you, for no apparent reason you elbowed me in the stomach. This wasn't a brush-by. This was a full-out elbow. As I yelled obscenities, you just turned and said something drunk and incoherent. If you're gonna start a fight, why wouldn't you come over and actually do something, rather than throw a sucker elbow and walk away? You'll get yours.

Confused and Angry

To the two highly attractive and bright young women sitting in the teacup seat at JP Licks on Newbury, on the warm Sunday afternoon of April 5:

You were aware enough to see my four-year-old son look wistfully at the teacup and to overhear me tell my kids that the store was too crowded, and we would need to take our ice cream out to eat in another location. So you waited until I paid for our ice cream, and then tapped my shoulder to give us your seat. What a kind and wonderful gesture! And sorry that I told my kids to say, "Thank you to the ladies." Consider it parental force-of-habit. Clearly, you are two interesting, cool women (with funky glasses, which I envied). The next time I catch you at JP Licks, I definitely owe you an ice cream. Thanks again.

To the woman sitting next to me at the Trident Cafe on Newbury Street:

About four or five weeks ago, I was working on college transfer applications with a friend when you and your daughter sat down at the booth next to me and ordered the most delicious, melty, avocado and grilled-cheese sandwich. We commented on how wonderful it looked and, 15 minutes after you left the cafe, we were delighted to find our waitress walking towards us with the same sandwich. You were so kind to buy one for us, and for that I thank you. It renewed my faith in humanity's generous nature. I've done a few good deeds myself since then on your behalf, and I implore others to follow your example: One good deed brightens a day and goes a much longer way than expected. Thank you so much!

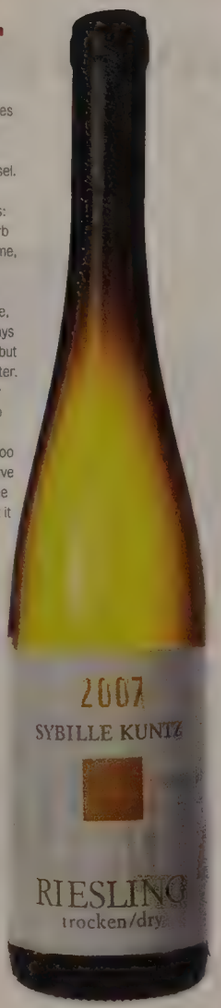
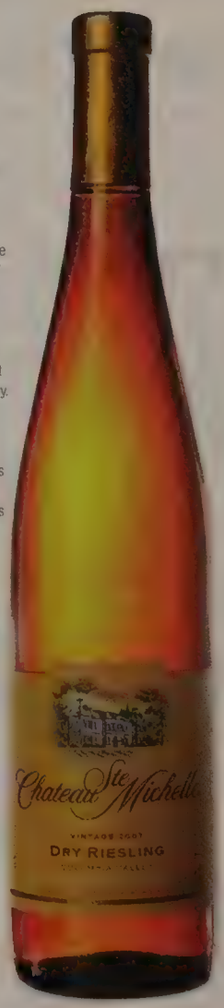
Riesling Time



It's riesling season! What suits the springtime vibe better than a garden-scented, lightly peachy white wine you can sip as the curtain falls on a bright breezy afternoon? For me, the grape's chameleon-like ultra-versatility means the calendar is always filled with riesling occasions: a delicate, chilled 8 percent alcohol Mosel kabinett is the perfect refresher on a summer afternoon. An earthy mineral-laced bone-dry Alsace grand cru is a delicious place setter for a Thanksgiving bounty. A fuller-bodied lime and cooked-apple Clare Valley riesling in front of a fire is a great antidote to the wintry blues.

In recent years, everyone's starting to catch riesling fever, so you don't have to search high and low to find one anymore. The magic it creates with food is legendary. There's a style to suit almost anything you'd want to put on the table, red meat excepted. Any self-respecting restaurant features at least one by the glass. Not only does riesling age well, but many of the best wines are also affordable. These three blind-tasting winners stood out in my recent survey of everyday, recession-priced wines.



Flonheimer Binger Berg Riesling Spätlese
Rheinhessen Germany, 2007 (Blanchards, Jamaica Plain, $9). The only thing against this wine is the tongue-twisting moniker. Get beyond that and you'll discover that you can't get spätlese (a category of high-quality later-harvest, generally sweeter wine) for anything close to this price. The Flonheimer's got a perfume of apricot and flowers, a juicy peach nectar flavor with enough refreshing acid to balance it and a very pleasing bitterness in the finish. Unless you're afraid to pronounce it, what's not to like?

Sybille Kuntz Riesling Trocken
Mosel Germany, 2007 (Busa Brothers, Lexington, $18). This organic producer makes serious dry wine from my favorite German region, the Middle Mosel. It's a riesling for sauvignon blanc lovers: complex citric and herb aromas, with lemon-lime, spicy, green-apple flavors that linger and linger. It's a big, intense, crisp mouthful that plays nicely with raw clams but also stands up to lobster. Serve this one to your wine snob friends who claim they don't like riesling because "it's too sweet." Better yet serve it to them blind and see if they can guess what it is. Then watch them backpedal.

Chateau Ste. Michelle "Dry Riesling"
Columbia Valley Washington, 2007 (Cambridge Wine & Spirits, $12). OK, I was wrong: You can get a good American riesling. After so many disappointingly flat, over-alcoholic, bitter examples, it's nice to see that the mega-winery of the Pacific Northwest is leading the way with a wine like this: racy, mouthwatering, with baked apple, lemon zest and fruit-laced minerality. This could well be the all-purpose bargain-priced riesling that appeals to everyone. It's dry but has enough complex fruit sensations that you can sip it with salads, fried fish or creamy cheeses. Beware though: You might just like it enough that you won't want to share the bottle.

Going Out

FAT AND HAPPY

As his friend Paul Malvone cooks in the kitchen, co-owner Sebastian Fricia remembers a talk they had months back. "I said, 'On Sunday nights, do you get that sick feeling in your stomach like you gotta go to school the next day? Do you wanna be getting that until you're 65?"

"I decided I had to make a change, and it had to be now," manager Malvone admitted earlier in the dining room. So with experience working in Fricia's Ronny's Place in Medford, Malvone left his job at the post office and spent his pent-up energy devising one of the more devious menus the area has seen in some time.

Boston Burger Company cooks up 22 varieties. There's the North Ender ($8.25) with mozzarella, tomato and balsamic mayo. And there's the King ($8.50), topped with bacon, fried bananas and creamy peanut butter. What's amazing is that the King may only be the fourth most fattening thing on the menu. Though you can get your beer-battered and deep-fried Artery Clogger ($8.25) with a turkey or veggie burger ($1 extra), if you're feeling disciplined.

The options are creative and tasty, but the restaurant seems to define itself more by what it's not. "We're not McDonald's," Fricia declares. A well-made burger, in his opinion, takes 15 minutes to make. "Clearly, we're not skinny people," he admits, as a one-pound-plus order of garlic parm fries ($6.95) is delivered to a stout man at an adjacent table, his eyebrows raising in surprise.

Things are big at the Boston Burger Company, from the servings to the palpable sense of Malvone's cautious optimism. "I did miss it," he says, referring to his time at Ronny's Place. "I needed to get back into the swing of things." Because the ache of a contented, if distended, stomach beats an ulcer any day. NICK ALTSCHULLER

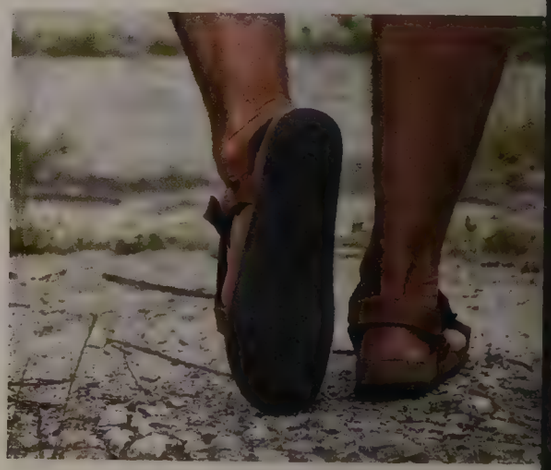
LEAVING IT BEHIND, FINALLY

A young man painstakingly learns how to overcome his fears.



"TIME EQUALS progression. Progression equals death." To reverse life's flow, 24-year-old Ed Zine lives "on the end of a mental tether with invisible strands attached to every muscle, thought and spoken word."

The obsessive-compulsive Zine attempts to symbolically "rewind" everything: by walking backwards, placing footsteps just so, organizing each object, performing actions in a tormented choreography. Making a phone call, which involves excruciating Byzantine counting rituals, takes hours. The heartbreaking death of his mother during Zine's childhood, exacerbated by his Marine father's bullying, propelled Zine into this agonizing and lonely way of life, lived in the cellar. On one rare outing, when his friend mistakenly makes a left turn, Zine flees the car and walks mostly backwards, 50 miles, to his "safe" cave. Enter the compassionate, curious, quirky OCD expert Dr. Jenike, who helps Zine very gradually "flip the script." He spends hours waiting for Zine to cross the room and, eventually, take his first shower in two years. With Jenike's support, Zine develops a counterpoint of anti-rituals involving miniscule alterations in perspective leading to huge changes, like the ability to walk forward, not backward, and go outdoors. Where he meets Mayada, the sensitive saint who becomes his wife. ✖✖✖

The folks at Dave's Fresh Pasta are really selling themselves short with that name. Since they expanded last month, strands of cut-to-order lemon-basil fettucine and dozens of varieties of ravioli and pasta sauces make up just a fraction of the market's offerings. HAPPY RETURNS

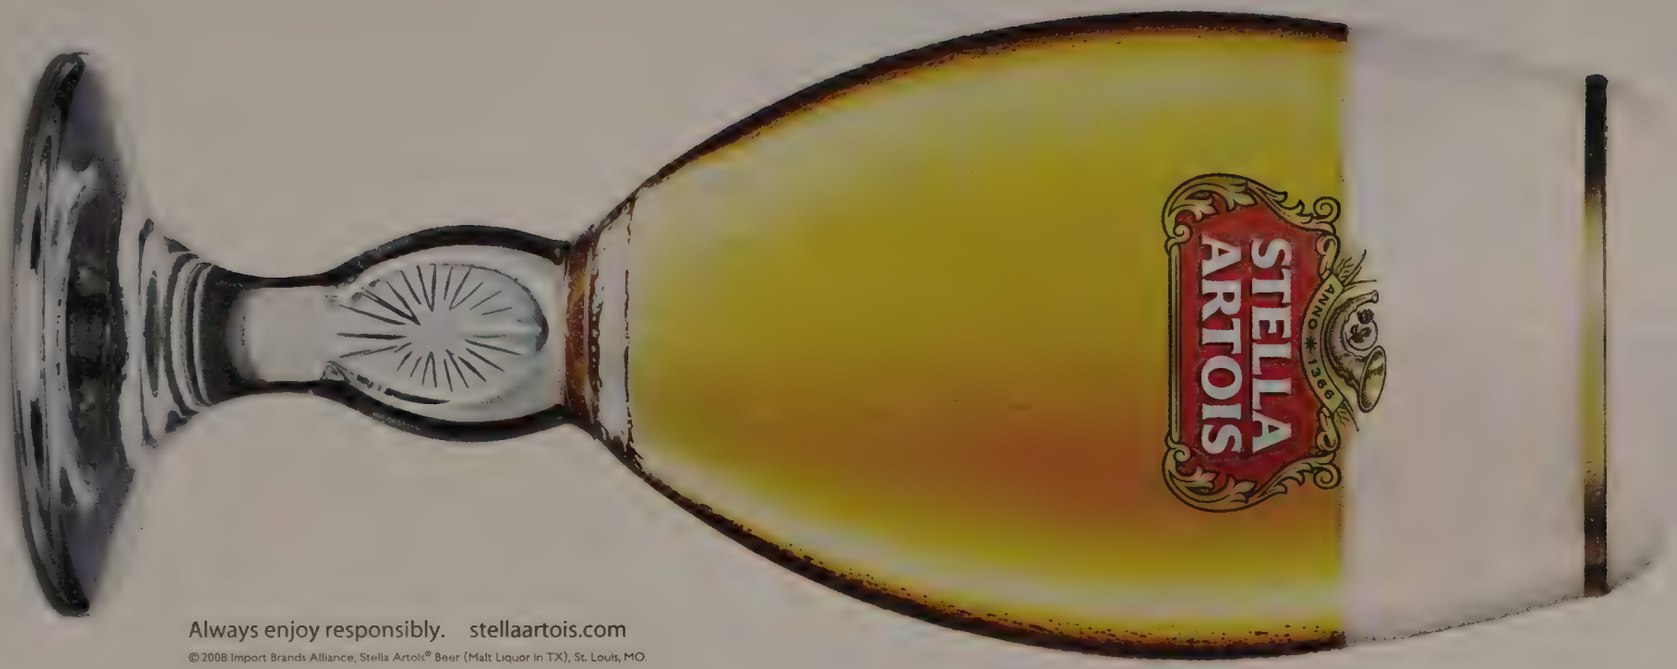
Restaurant Week renewed

IT'S NO SECRET that Restaurant Week, though eagerly anticipated by budget-minded diners, was often grudgingly tolerated by restaurateurs and uniformly dreaded by waitstaff on account of minimal tips. Until this year, when Restaurant Week, according to industry insiders, seemed to mark new signs of hope in the gloomy economy and a return of "regulars" who'd had it with hunkering down.

"People are sick and tired of being sick and tired," says Michael Murphy, general manager of BanQ, and formerly of Mistral. He recognized diners who hadn't been to the restaurant in a while, and noticed that these "true diners" were likely to order, for example, "an $80 bottle of wine" to supplement their moderately-priced meal. "People were excited to see other people out," he says.



Chris Parsons, chef/owner of Catch, went the extra mile to lure diners to his highly-regarded Winchester restaurant. "This year, we decided to offer the entire menu, to showcase what we do best," he says. Meaning Gloucester scallops with celery root puree and braised short-rib ravioli instead of... chicken. Says Parsons, the check average dropped "a little," but the investment was worthwhile: "A few first-timers have already come back."

Since 1990, when she co-opened Galleria Italiana, Marisa Iocco has made her mark in a series of top-notch Italian restaurants, including La Bettola, Bricco, Umbria and Mare. Now, she's executive chef at Spiga in Needham, which has already opened once, then closed. Recently remodeled into a cozy, high-ceilinged dining room with saffron-bright walls and golden silk curtains, the new Spiga now serves both casual, self-service lunch and fine-dining-style dinner daily, like the old Gal Ital. Iocco fans will love the new menu. It includes handmade pastas, seafood risotto brodetto and, of course, her signature bread pudding with salted caramel sauce.

Perfection has its price.

Of course it tastes better than other beers. We've had over 600 years to get the recipe right. Our esteemed brewery has been producing beer in Leuven since 1366. Which means we've been around a bit longer than most. Mind you, over the years our beer has witnessed the odd change or two. For instance, our customers no longer drink it to ward off the Plague, as they used to in medieval times. However, one thing has stayed the same after all these years. Stella Artois is still painstakingly brewed in a time-honored tradition with the choicest ingredients. Which is why our customers have kept coming back for more, even after 600 years.

Always enjoy responsibly. stellaartois.com

Dining { ERIN BYERS MURRAY AND GREG REEVES }

GOOD SPORT

Sportello dishes out high-end Italian in quick, easy fashion.

COUNTER PRODUCTIVITY Green Street Grill's Greg Reeves starts the meal light with fennel and celery salad.

"THIS ACTUALLY REMINDS me of B&G," remarked Greg Reeves as we grabbed counter stools at Sportello. To me, the similarities between Barbara Lynch's newest venue—her take on an upscale Italian-style diner—and the restaurateur's South End oyster bar weren't immediately obvious. But Reeves, who heads the kitchen at Cambridge's Green Street Grill, had spent four years at B&G and Lynch's the Butcher Shop, so I entertained his theory.

Reeves broke it down. The music is modern rock, set to a level where you can hear your companion but not the neighboring diners. The short, stationary stools are fine for a quick meal, but aren't the most comfortable seating. The room features an open kitchen and plenty of people, and the menu is high-end, intricate and pricey.

Dining here wasn't meant to be a drawn-out experience, but rather a series of brisk, delicious hits of fresh salads, house-crafted pastas, entrees and desserts. We were in for a treat.

Our server suggested a glass of Nino Franco Prosecco Rustico ($11), which she poured ceremoniously into narrow, stemless juice glasses. Reeves and I toasted the simplicity and got busy checking out the menu.

We passed on the antipasti. "I'd rather start with something light and fresh," Reeves remarked. The fennel and celery salad ($9) hit the spot with bright slivers of fennel atop citrusy celery greens, thinly shaved Parmigiano-Reggiano and a few drops of olive oil and lemon. We also cleaned a plate of roasted turnips ($10) served over creamy Taleggio and layered with grilled radicchio and walnuts.

By then we were staring at empty wine glasses, so our server brought over two whites for us to try. We both agreed on the Sicilian Cusumano Alcamo ($9), but Reeves conceded, "I'm a wine drinker, but I'm not super-educated about it."

On the other hand, Reeves does have a bachelor's in environmental science and oceanography from the University of New Hampshire. He followed that with a degree from the Cambridge School of Culinary Arts, which he attended while working through the kitchens of Audubon Circle, Aquitaine and UpStairs on the Square, eventually landing at the oyster bar. "When I got to B&G, [the bachelor's] was great," he said. "I would get a halibut and knew why the top side was black and bottom side was white. It all came together."

Caramel pudding cake

Our entrees soon arrived. We split three half orders of pasta (more than enough for two), starting with the stand-out escargot ravioli ($11 half/$21 full), which were filled with plump, whole escargot and sat atop a creamy artichoke puree. "The first time I ate escargot, I was like, 'What is this thing? It's going to be fishy, slimy,'" admitted Reeves. "But instead, it was chewy, moist and meaty. I like that you can see and taste them in the ravioli."

The tomato gnocchitini ($10 half/$20 full) were, true to the name, tiny gnocchi tossed with poached mussels and broth flavored with tomatoes and mascarpone. Though the mussels weren't the focal point of the dish, they gave the sauce an earthy undertone. We also dug the caseroncelli ($11 half/$22 full), a breaded chicken cutlet with toothsome, bow-shaped pasta stuffed with mimolette. The addictive crunch of fried sage leaves compensated for the dish's saltiness.

As we ate, Reeves noticed elements of the restaurant that a layperson might miss. A high-tech oven in the open kitchen, for example, was "probably smarter than both of us combined," he said. "Push a button, and it can put out a whole meal." And he appreciated her sleek, modern dinner- and glassware. He observed, "It's cool, she has a vision and a goal for everything."

We ended our meal with two desserts from the short finale menu, as well as a carrot cupcake from the display case beside the grab-and-go coffee station. We were both licking the remains from a plate of caramel pudding cake ($8) and loved the drizzle of olive oil and shower of sea salt over a chocolate budino ($8).

Not quite ready to hit the town, Reeves suggested we grab a drink at Lynch's bar, Drink, downstairs. "I don't get over to Boston from Cambridge that often," he said, leading the way. "Might as well take advantage, right?" ×××

TOUGH TWITTY

Give me a Tweet. Better yet, don't.

A COUPLE WEEKS BACK, Heather and I were shopping at the Wrentham Outlets. I opened the door of a dressing room to get her opinion. She looked at the pants, grimaced and said, "I don't love the wash on those." Which is fine, except that I was trying on a shirt. But it was enlightening to learn that Heather hates my favorite pair of jeans.

That little anecdote is 345 characters long. Which means that it's 205 characters longer than the maximum length of a Twitter message. If you're one of those technophobes who doesn't Twitter, allow me to explain how this awesome new technology works: You type a message—a very short message—and it goes out to people who sign up to follow your updates. Your updates, or "Tweets," can also be sent as text messages. According to the Twitter site, "Real life happens between blog posts and e-mails. And now, there's a way to share."

You mean, there's a way to share besides texting and instant messenger and Facebook and Skype and the phone? To paraphrase Jay-Z, I've got 99 problems, but telling people what I ate for breakfast ain't one.

Since I can't seem to grasp the point of Twitter, I asked my Facebook friends if they use it, and why. The overwhelming response amongst Twitterers is, "I use it for business to keep in touch with clients." Reading between the lines, then, Twits are tweeting not because this is a super-useful new system, but because they don't want to be perceived as technologically backward. Well, I hate to break it to you, but if you just want to act hip to what the kids are doing, you shouldn't be tweeting. You should be sexting.

If I'm confused over the point of Twitter, at least Twitter is, too. By way of explaining its purpose, the Twitter site proclaims, "Eating soup? Research shows that moms want to know." Yet Twitter also asserts that it "puts you in control and becomes a modern antidote to information overload."

If those two statements seem entirely at odds, they're not. I'll explain. Imagine you're in a meeting and your phone buzzes. You've got a text message. You open it to find a Tweet from me. The news hits you like a runaway Mack truck: I'm eating soup. This changes everything. You punch your boss in the face and move to Montana to hunt bison and live in a cabin with no phone or Internet access. Voilà—the antidote to information overload.

The fact that Twitter even exists says a lot about the contemporary penchant for navel-gazing. Once upon a time, shared information was by default important information, because it was prohibitively expensive to hire a town crier to inform everyone that you wonder why men have nipples. Technology improved, but still, the transfer of information had an underlying point: Sally has dysentery. Stop. Send britches. Stop.

The problem with Twitter (and the conceptually identical Facebook status update) is that many people have no filter on their information sharing. The people who update their status 15 times a day apparently lack the capacity to assume a detached view of their actions—if it's important to them, it must be important to everyone. I rarely update my Facebook status, because of this simple rationale: either I'm doing something boring, so it's presumptuous that anyone would care, or I'm doing something awesome, in which case it sounds like I'm bragging and being a douchebag. My friend Kerry has great status updates because, as a rule, they're never about what he's actually doing. For instance, he recently posted, "I think Bread was the worst group named after a food... Wild Cherry the best one-hit wonder named after food... and Meat Loaf the best drunken sing-along artist named after food."

Absurdly, even that nugget of an observation is too long for a Tweet. Twitter allows room for the "what" at the expense of the "why," which results in an unusual fusion of succinctness and banality. If Raymond Carver were still alive, he'd definitely have mixed feelings about Twitter.

But nobody wants to miss out on a cultural phenomenon, no matter how stupid, as evidenced by the popularity of the Slanket. Slankets, however, at least keep you warm. Twitter is so asinine and cynical that I half suspect it's the subject of a gentleman's wager between Bill Gates and Steve Jobs. "I bet you, sir, that you cannot get 20 million people to embrace a platform that is inferior to a simple e-mail and encourages the bored and uninteresting to share their every thought." Various estimates put the number of Twitter users around 14 million already, so I expect to see Bill Gates with a Mohawk any day now.

In the meantime, I think I'll continue to sit this one out. I'm too busy to Twitter. I've got soup to eat, people to sext. ✖✖✖

The Collins Card { CHRIS COLLINS }

BATTER UP

Offense is the key to Sox success.

I AM IN MY GLORY. I always am, come April and May. I love trees. I love grass. I love fresh air. I love seeing people.

But what I love most—outside of Mrs. Collins (of course)—is waking up everyday knowing that my job is the best in the world. For the local sports fan, especially within 50 miles of Boston, it doesn't get any better than this. The Celtics are preparing for another championship run. And guess what? So are our Bruins. The next two months will be a blur. I will be doing overtime at TD Banknorth Garden. It will rock, just like the old Garden did. But what rocks my boat most of all is baseball.

The baseball season is what this region lives for. It's in our blood. I know it's in mine. Slow start or not—and it's a little slower than many of us expected— I believe we're in a special time around here with the Red Sox. The Red Sox have the best starting pitching that I have seen in my lifetime. The bullpen might even be better. But question marks abound. It wouldn't be Boston if we didn't have a panic button nearby. Here are my five main concerns:

1. Jacoby Ellsbury may be the fastest guy in baseball. His 2007 entrance into our existence was special. Not only could he run, but he could field and, especially, hit. While the Red Sox pitching was phenomenal in the 2007 playoffs, Ellsbury's World Series made the sweep a formality. Over a year later, he's looking more like the confused Coco Crisp instead of the most riveting player on the Red Sox. If this doesn't get fixed, the loss of Manny Ramirez becomes an issue. Ellsbury changes everything if he can be anything like the guy from 2007.

2. Reigning Most Valuable Player Dustin Pedroia, I'm convinced, would be a first ballot Hall of Famer had he been just three or four inches taller. Pedrioa has the best hand-eye coordination in the game. The number of times he hits the ball on the screws is uncanny and unmatched. Last year, before the start of the season, I asked him if he could hit .320. He looked at me like I was crazy and uttered, "330." My only question about Pedroia is his standards. Are they too high? Is it too much to expect another MVP-caliber season? My answer: Yes, that could be a problem. If Ellsbury officially has the sophomore slump then Pedroia needs to be great. I just don't know if that's realistic for anyone in baseball.

3. David Ortiz is not David Ortiz. And that's a problem. It wasn't long ago that an Ortiz at bat was must-see TV. While he's still productive, he's not on track for the 40-homer, 140-RBI season we've been accustomed to. Success in sports is also as much mental as it is physical, and Big Papi continues to struggle with Manny absence in the cleanup spot. The Sox, as constituted on offense, need the "old" Big Papi in the third hole. This scares me a bit. I'm waiting for the walk-off homer or the 2-homer, 5-RBI games he would toss onto the stat sheet every couple of weeks. We're all waiting.

4. Kevin Youkilis deserves a ton of credit. He has gone from the Greek God of Walks (that's what A's GM Billy Beane called him as a minor leaguer) to an All-Star slugger. I'm just hoping The Improper Bostonian cover jinx doesn't derail him. Maybe he really isn't a cleanup guy, but that's where he has to be right now. I wonder if Youkilis is better suited for third spot or even the fifth spot in the lineup. Here's hoping the pressure of being "the Man" sits well with him.

5. JD Drew was sitting on the bench in the second game of the season because the Red Sox were facing hard-throwing lefty Scott Kazmir of the Tampa Bay Rays. While that might be a good thing to do in July and August, to give him a rest on April 7—are you kidding me? Do you think this what Theo Epstein had in mind when he signed Drew to a $70 million-five-year deal? When Big Papi went down early last season with a wrist injury was one of the two times Drew earned his paycheck (the other being the ALCS in 2007). Drew might be the poster boy for "frustration." He's got the sweetest swing in the game, but it always seems a muscle pull is two innings away. Can he pick up the slack for Big Papi if called upon? That's a big question.

There are other question marks, like what to expect from Jason Bay's first full season in the American League, although his batting in the sixth slot eases some of that burden. Other unknowns: Mike Lowell's return and injury; captain Jason Varitek's decline as a hitter; and Jed Lowrie, another struggling sophomore. But I have hope. I really do. The pitching couldn't be better. It's the best in the game. And good pitching means pennant race; it means playoffs. But that isn't enough around here. We want championships.

And that, my friends, will be up to the offense. ✖✖✖

TIM'S TIMELESSNESS AND A NOD TO BIG BABY

4 B's and C's Playoff Thoughts

Ticket Stub to Super Sub With apologies to our savior Rajon Rondo, Big Baby was this year's most improved Celtic, and that good fortune has lasted into the postseason. This is looking ahead a little (OK, a lot), but with KG's minutes sure to be reined in, we're throwing the Ticket Stub's hat into the 2010 Sixth Man Award ring. Note to the NBA: Please make the ring a little bigger.

Big Up to Broomsticks While watching the Bruins' shellacking of the long-despised Canadiens, we couldn't help but be reminded of the 2004 ALCS. They'll have to win the Cup for the comparison to ring true, but like the Sox with that Yankees series, the Bruins have already cleared their highest mental hurdle.

Tough Times for Leon You'd never confuse him with an NBA All Star, but that didn't stop Leon Powe from maturing into one of the most genuinely likable athletes our city's seen in a while. Words can't explain how depressed we are over his latest knee injury, but we wish him more than the very best in recovery.

Leader of the Crew Milan Lucic's suspension was all kinds of BS, but moving forward, the B's can't afford to be without him. A bruiser like Lucic needs to have a short memory, but next time he tries to decapitate somebody, hopefully he'll remember how badly his services are needed—or at least deliver a more brutal hit.

5 EARLY RED SOX RETURNS

Gator Sighting Just how long has Tim Wakefield been suiting up for the Sox? When he made his Fenway debut, Mike Greenwell was the starting leftfielder! Fourteen years later, and maybe Knuckles isn't quite as consistent as he used to be, but the man picks his spots like a Navy Seal sniper. That near no-hitter in Oakland was another in a long-line of heroic starts we'll look back on fondly once Timmy retires in 2032.

Fueling the Fire Dustin Pedroia got off to another slow start this season, and we wouldn't have it any other way. It's like he annually decides to suck on purpose, just long enough for someone to print something bad about him. Then he tapes it to his locker and the rest is history: "Look what they're saying about you, Dustin! Whatchoo gonna do about it, Dustin!?"

Call Them Young Guns Justin Masterson was perfectly fine on Patriots' Day, but we'll ask again: What's up with Clay Buchholz? He was poised for a great comeback year. Meanwhile, Masterson could be the most deadly and versatile Sox middle reliever since Derek Lowe in 1999—only he won't show up smelling like he slept under a barstool at Daisy's.

Knocking on Wood But we couldn't be more pleased with Mike Lowell. The last time we saw him, he was a wreck, wincing with every movement like Russell Crowe at the end of Gladiator. We weren't sure he'd ever be the same. Now, he's rejuvenated and, even though it's crazy early, consider us just as crazily optimistic.

Short on Shortstops With Jed Lowrie on the shelf, the Sox must either roll the dice with Nick Green or subject the nation to another dose of Julio Lugo… OR they could make good on a longstanding Take Five dream and reactivate Johnny Pesky! He's got a better arm than Lugo, plus he'd own the plate. Who'd dare throw inside on an 89-year-old?

1 ONE BOLD PLAYOFF PREDICTION

After Banner 17, Celtics fans are forever indebted to PJ Brown, a physically limited but crafty big man with a soft touch, iron jaw and nose for the ball. PJ's not walking through that door, but if the C's get back to the conference finals, his role will be filled… by none other than Kevin Garnett.

2 COMPLETELY UNSARCASTIC PARAGRAPHS

Countdown to Kick-Off Seeing that the WBC was SUCH a success, how about a World Football Classic this summer? Not only could Tom Brady get a few meaningless, high-impact reps before the fall, but Dice-K could play quarterback for the Japanese! After all, nothing complements arm fatigue like post-concussion syndrome.

Mind If I Call You Son? If we had a daughter, we only hope she'd someday bring home a fellow of the caliber of Joakim Noah. His unbridled arrogance, that shit-eating grin that makes you want to stomp his face with cleats, the glowing aura that leads you to wonder, "Is he maybe the worst person in the entire world?" What more could you ask for in a son-in-law?

3 DATES TO WATCH

5/1 It's Wes Welker's 28th birthday, which he'll probably celebrate by taking home any girl he wants from any bar in New England. (Except maybe Ramrod, but we're sure he'd do OK for himself there, too.)

5/4 The Red Sox make their maiden voyage to the new Yankee Stadium, or as we're calling it: The House That A-Rod's Cousin Built.

5/12 The Sox head out to Anaheim for the second time in six weeks. Meanwhile, the two teams don't play again until Sept. 15 in Boston. We were about to call this moronic, but in Bud Selig's MLB, it actually makes perfect sense.

Chances Are You've Been Sitting on a Cure for Cancer

Before Lance, even before LeMond, there was the PMC, a 190-mile bike-a-thon that brought cycling to the American consciousness. Since 1980, the PMC has raised almost $240 million for cancer research. Today, 100 percent of every rider-raised dollar goes directly to that cause.

PMC 2009 – August 1 & 2 – 6,000 cyclists from 36 states and 6 countries will ride. Last year, the PMC raised $35 million for cancer research at the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. Are you ready to take the Pan-Mass Challenge?

Soroff On JULIANNE NICHOLSON

The Law & Order star on her upcoming films, pregnancy and Tom Selleck's moustache

MEDFORD NATIVE JULIANNE NICHOLSON is known to TV fans as the star of Law & Order: Criminal Intent, which begins a new season April 19. But she'll undoubtedly become more famous with the upcoming release of two feature films: Brief Interviews With Hideous Men (helmed by Newton's own John Krasinski) and Staten Island, which premiered to rave reviews at the Berlin Film Festival. A graduate of Arlington Catholic High School, Nicholson, 37, moved to New York to attend Hunter College and pursue a modeling career. Her long list of credits include a regular role on Ally McBeal and appearances in such feature films as Curtain Call, The Love Letter, One True Thing, Kinsey, Seeing Other People, Little Black Book and Flannel Pajamas. She lives in L.A. with her husband, actor Jonathan Cake, and their son, Ignatius. Currently, she is expecting their second child.

Jonathan Soroff: First, you're a Medford girl. Tell me the best thing about the town.
Julianne Nicholson: Well, my Dad lives in "Woo-bin" now, so I don't really go back to "Meh-fuh" that much, but the thing that jumps to mind is that I religiously went to Papa Gino's in Medford Square.

What do you think the nuns at Arlington Catholic think of your career choice?
I hope that they'd be proud. I just got the alumni newsletter, and it made me feel nostalgic in a way I usually don't. I left Medford when I was 18, and I don't think about that time in my life a lot, but I was really impressed by the newsletter and the things they're doing. That's a boring answer, but it's the truth.

When you got married, why didn't you take the name Cake?
Laziness. The idea of changing my driver's license and credit cards was too much for me. It's on my marriage certificate, though, so it's nice to know it's always an option.

So your son's name is Iggy Cake. With that name, isn't he destined to be a punk rocker?
He's doomed or destined—not sure which. Y'know, with the name Ignatius, it could go either way. If he is Iggy Cake, then yes, he's destined to be a rock star. But if it's Ignatius, he could be an economist. He's also going to be about 6'7", so no one's going to give him any trouble about it, I don't think.

Do you resent being referred to as "model-turned-actress"?
No, mostly because I feel it's inaccurate. People will think whatever they want to. I guess it's not totally inaccurate, because I did model, but at this point, I've been acting for much longer, and I've had a lot more success as an actor. So I don't care.

Worst thing about modeling?
Oh, God. Where to begin? It was the first time that I was called fat. I went to Paris, and they would measure me weekly, and it totally spun me out about food in a way I never had before. It was horrible. I never felt worse about myself than when I was modeling.

How about the best thing?
They said horrible things about me there, but I did get to live in Paris for six months.

Speaking of thin, on Ally McBeal, did you ever feel like tackling Calista Flockhart and shoving a cracker down her throat?
[Laughs.] No. I got there the fifth season, and by then she was eating.

You worked with Tom Selleck. Did he ever get food stuck in his mustache?
I'm afraid not. He was always very well groomed.

Do you hear the Law & Order "ka-chung" sound when you go to bed at night?
No. But, hilariously, I was watching Sesame Street with my son the other day, and they do a spoof of SVU because of the letters—get it?—and at the end it just keeps going ka-chung, ka-chung, ka-chung, and all the puppets are like "Aaaaaaah! That noise!" But I think my show doesn't use it.

How do you do a TV show when you have a toddler and you're pregnant?
[Laughs.] It's really hard. I'm really, really tired. I think I'm basically just in denial. But luckily, I only do every other episode, so I work very hard for eight days and then I have eight days off.

How many pregnant detectives do you think there really are in the world?
I'm sure they're out there. I couldn't give you numbers, but I'm sure they procreate.

In Brief Interviews With Hideous Men, I smell an Oscar in your future.
[Laughs.] You haven't seen the movie. Let's put it this way: I'm not rehearsing an acceptance speech.

Any role you regret?
No. There may be things I'd do differently, but nothing I'm absolutely horrified by.

Worst audition experience?
They're all sort of awful. It's just a setup for sweaty armpits and a bad stomach.

Strangest thing you ever read about yourself in a tabloid or a magazine?
It's funny. You say something once and it follows you around. Like, I climbed a rock wall by chance, and I happened to mention that I had tried it and enjoyed it. To this day, I'm a big rock climber according to different sources, even though I only did it once six years ago.

Actors always put big lies on their résumés. What was yours?
I never did, because I was too chicken I'd get caught. I did lie about my age once, because I did this audition and it went really great, but I was much older than the part. Right as I was leaving, they said, "By the way, how old are you?" And I lied by like a year, which was so pointless.

July 1, 1971. That's your birthday.
Yes, and it would be great if you could really highlight that in the interview. [Laughs.] But I did end up getting that job, and it just ate at me. I finally had to come clean. It was so embarrassing.

Last Question: Ever count your freckles?
No. I think they're infinite. They're like stars or grains of sand on the beach. ✖✖✖

BRIGHT YOUNG THINGS

BRAINPOWER IS BOSTON'S BUSINESS. DEEP THINKERS ABOUND. Genius on the Charles—both sides, of course—is a given. But rarely do we take time to salute these natural resources, especially before they become household names.

Behold 10 (actually, 11) of the city's best young minds: brainiacs on the brink, if you will. They're well-known in their fields, yet still on the cusp of fame. One critical criterion in gaining admission to our select group is that these intellectuals actually live here. They aren't just passing through. Another is that whether they toil in the arts, letters or sciences, they contribute a broad benefit to the common good.

Here they are. Prepare to be

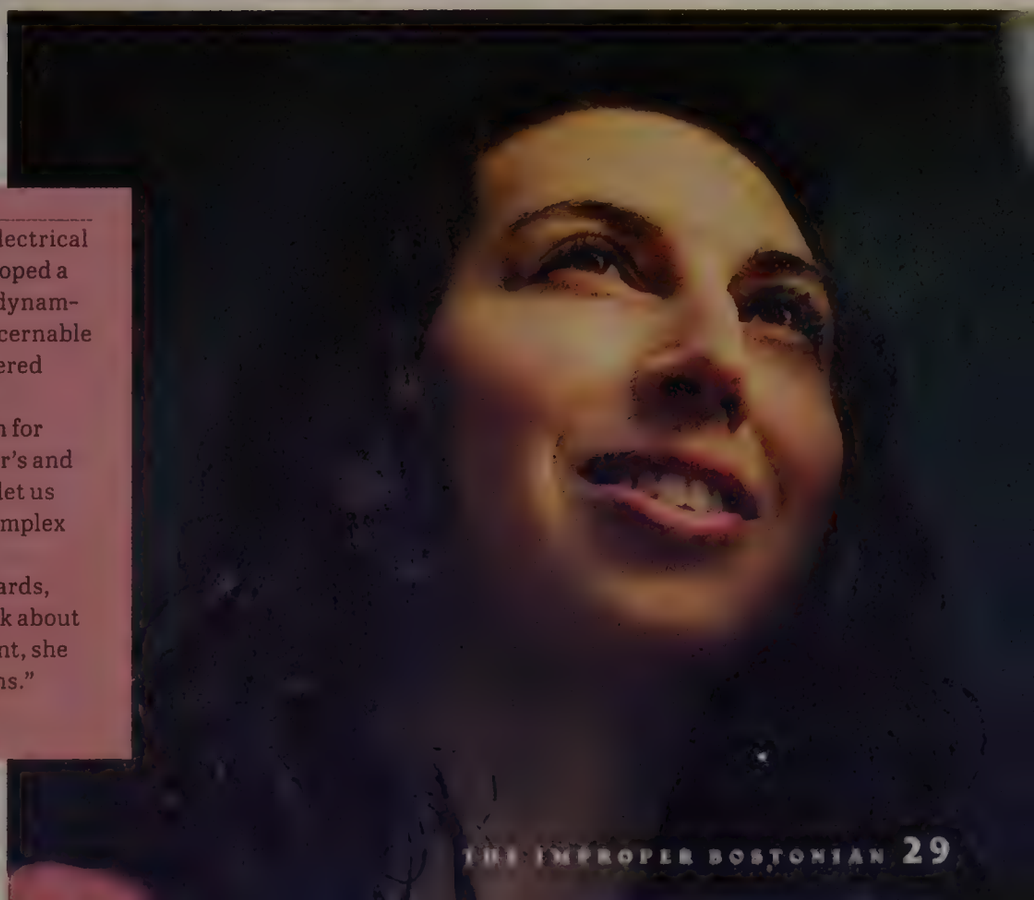
AT 17, ARIELLE AND DANIELLE Galler-Rabinowitz, musical composers and concert pianists, have created more than 50 classical works, including a full-length ballet. These brilliant Brookline twins have won about 50 national and international awards over the past decade. They have performed both solo and together at Carnegie Hall.

In what they call a "hobby," they are also champion figure skaters.

Giggling like the teens they are, then sounding almost preternaturally, uh, composed, the twins, who are juniors at Buckingham, Browne & Nichols in Cambridge, say they don't have a favorite rock group. They don't own iPods. Yet they feel "completely normal."



"There are no external forces pushing me," Danielle says of her music. "To me, this is freedom." Adds Arielle: "I really love music and school. But music I can't live without."

Children of prominent local physicians, they say they may go to medical school. But they certainly wouldn't mind following in the footsteps of their father's cousin, a fellow by the name of Leonard Bernstein.

EMILY FOX, 26, an MIT grad student in electrical engineering and computer science, developed a computer model that helps decipher the dynamics of complex systems not otherwise discernable by humans. Like the interactions of two endangered species: honeybees and stock markets.

Originally from L.A., Fox has been a Bostonian for nine years ("I drive like one now!"). To a bachelor's and master's from MIT, she will soon add a Ph.D. in, let us quote, "Nonparametric Bayesian Learning of Complex Dynamical Phenomena."

Fox has won more than 10 fellowships and awards, and while she is understandably reluctant to talk about how her work could help forecast stock movement, she allows it might help with "short-term predictions." That's causing some buzz.

TODD ROSE, 34, IS A WORLDWIDE expert in Attention Deficit Hyperactive Disorder because, for one, he has it in spades. A high school dropout, an underachieving "stock boy and a father" at 19, he pulled his life together to graduate with highest honors from Weber State University in Utah ("a place the Harvard guys never heard of"). Then he went on to get his master's and doctorate at Harvard, joined the faculty of the School of Education and now cochairs the Connecting the Mind, Brain and Education institute. He's also a research scientist for a non-profit R&D organization, C.A.S.T., Inc.

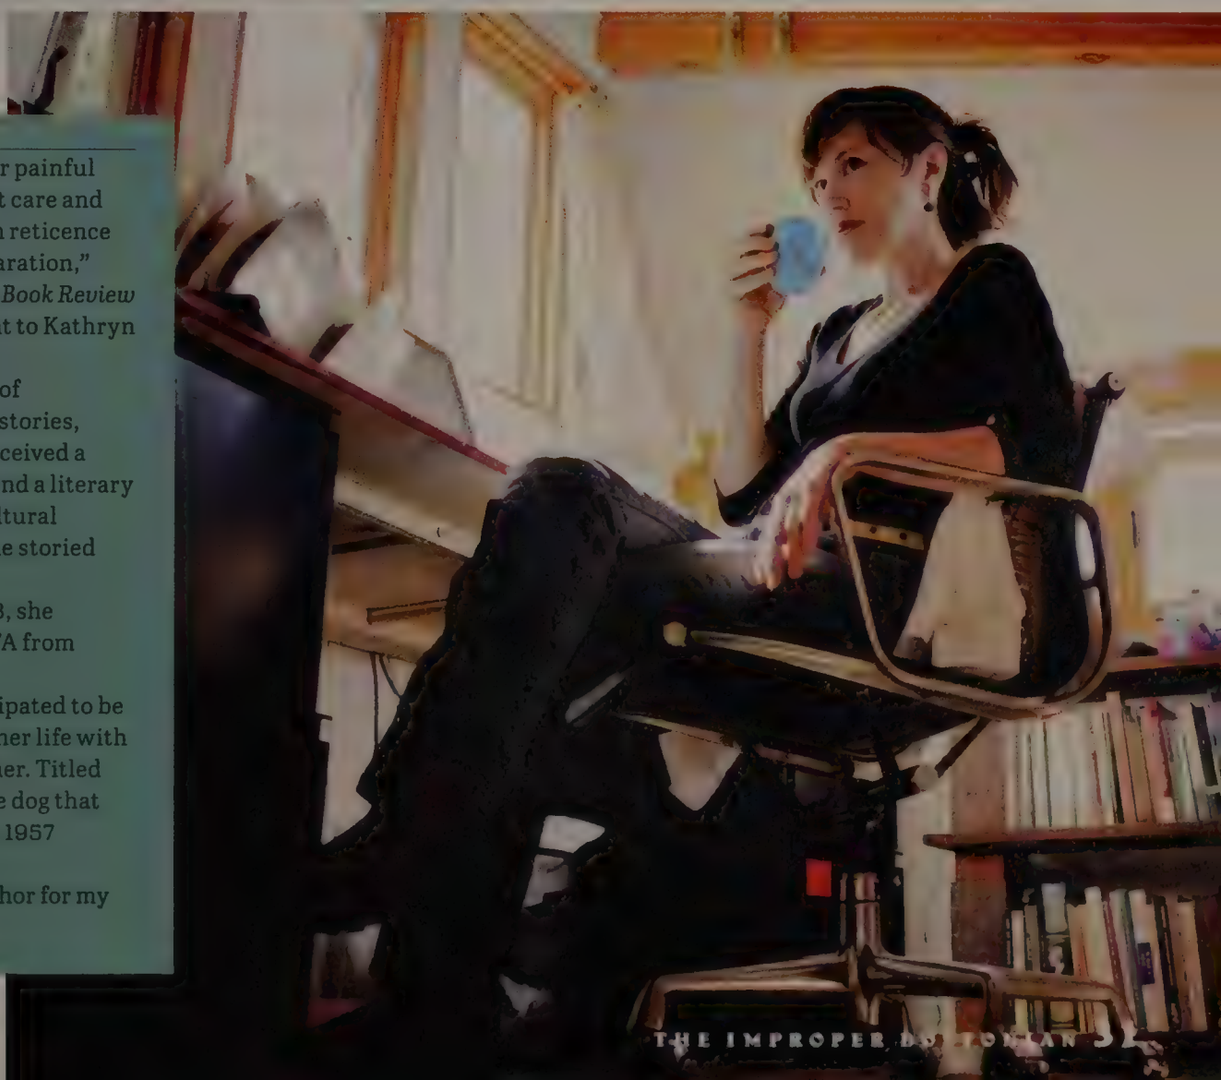
"Part of my work is to get rid of the silliness of 'disability,'" Rose says, emphasizing that so-called learning disabilities often produce remarkable talents in other areas. His own research has shown, for example, that dyslexic astrophysicists had surprising visual capabilities. He is currently creating groundbreaking curricular materials to retool the fundamentals of teaching, "with the brain, not its limits, in mind."

"I get bored faster than anybody," says Rose, who lives with his wife and two sons in Cambridge. "I write lesson plans so that if I'm OK, anyone's OK."

IN THE SAVAGE STAGE of video games, Cambridge's Eitan Glinert is a prince of lightness. Shortly after earning his master's in computer science from MIT last spring, he founded the Cambridge-based studio, Fire Hose Games (after the adage that "Learning at MIT is like drinking from the fire hose"). In a twist, his company will create small downloadable games "dedicated to making innovative and fun games that have positive"—read: educational—"impact." Several are in the pipeline.

As an MIT undergrad, Glinert, now 26, developed Audi Odyssey, the first video game with a Nintendo Wii remote that could be used by the blind. For the Federation of American Scientists he supervised the creation of Immune Attack, a game that aims to get kids excited about science and biology, while teaching them about immunology.

Focusing on "usability," Glinert says he hopes to improve access to video games for people of varying talents, "so they can get excited about science and engineering. Not from teaching, but from a behavioral impact that is fun."



ANDREW WITKIN of Jamaica Plain said he felt "absolutely blessed" in January when he won the prestigious Foster Prize, the Institute of Contemporary Art's top award for a local artist of exceptional promise. He didn't mind the $25,000 that came with it, either.

The director of Newbury Street's Barbara Krakow Gallery, Witkin, 31, has worked as an artist since his college days at Wesleyan and his graduate studies at the School of the Museum of Fine Arts Boston/Tufts University. His award-winning installation, titled Untitled, 1990-, "suspends the boundary between the artistic and the everyday," ICA director Jill Medvedow says, "evoking a sense of isolation and a longing for connection."

The installation combines architecture, found objects, theater and design: "very familiar things, altered slightly," Witkin says, "an ongoing exploration of essential life questions that began in 1990." The work encompasses two corridors containing hundreds of everyday belongings like photos, towels and tools, rearranged periodically, that lead to the installation's "heart," where disparate personal objects create an ambiguous vignette of life.

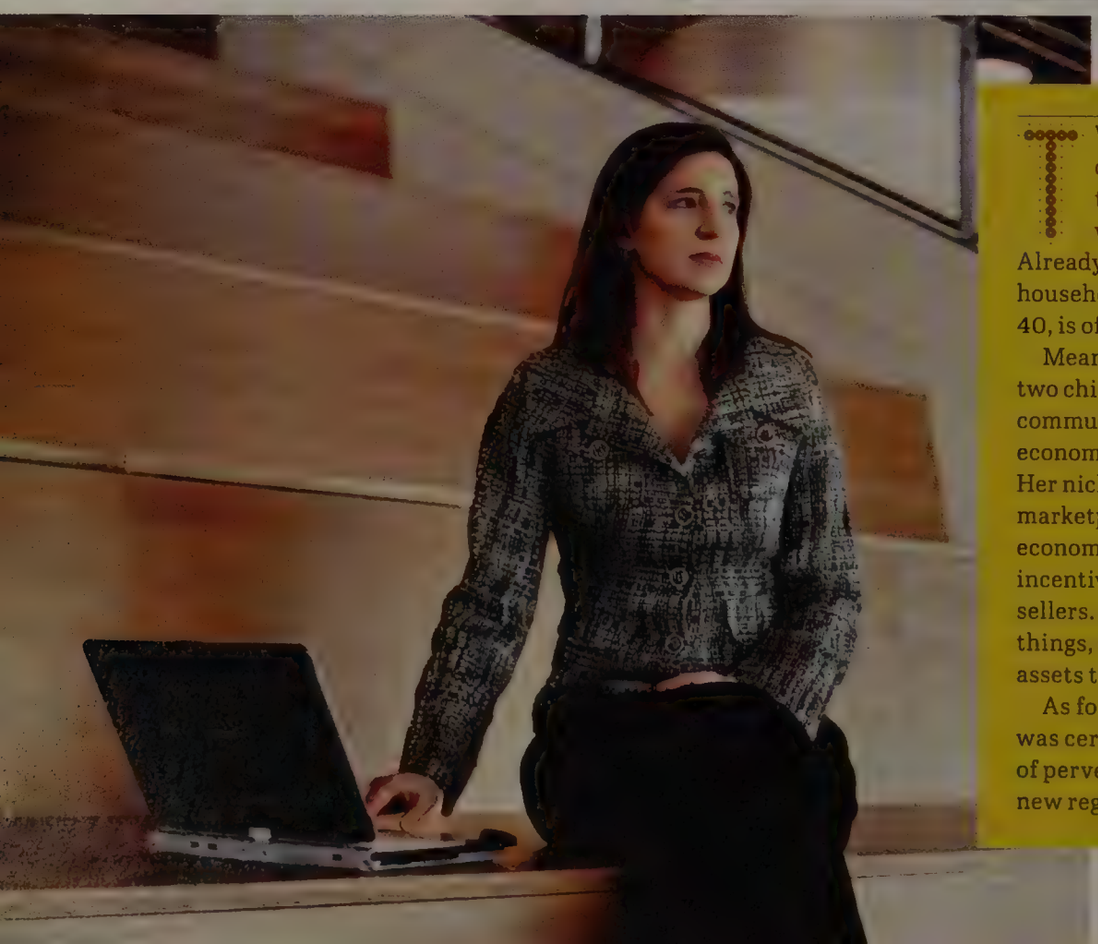
"Simple but opaque," says the artist.

KIM ADRIAN WORKS her painful subject matter with great care and respect. She knows when reticence will serve as well as declaration," says Sven Birkerts, the New York Times Book Review critic, who compares his former student to Kathryn Harrison of The Kiss fame.

Wife and mother of two, Adrian, 42, of Brookline, writes prize-winning short stories, fiction and nonfiction. Last year, she received a P.E.N. New England Discovery Award and a literary fellowship from the Massachusetts Cultural Council, plus a residency at Ragdale, the storied artist's colony in Lake Forest, Ill.

An on-off Boston resident since 1988, she graduated from Barnard and has an MFA from Bennington.

Adrian's breakthrough work is anticipated to be the memoir she is now finishing about her life with a mentally ill mother and alcoholic father. Titled Notes to Laika, it evokes the name of the dog that the Russians blasted into space back in 1957 onboard Sputnik II.



"In many ways, it's a personal metaphor for my mother," says Adrian.

MY MOTHER still doesn't know what I do for a living," says a laughing Nicco Mele, a self-described "technologist, politico and poet." That said, he's also the avatar of a new Internet political strategy that helped sweep a first-term Illinois senator into the White House.

A teacher turned entrepreneur who's started four companies, Mele's considered a paragon of online community-building. As Howard Dean's Webmaster in the 2004 presidential campaign, Mele wrote the blueprint for the former Vermont governor's breakthrough internet fundraising and organizational strategy. Then, with his Blue State Digital, Mele was a consultant for the Obama Web campaign. Now teaching at Harvard's Institute of Politics, he also runs EchoDitto, an internet strategy consulting company with offices in Cambridge, New York, Washington, D.C., Los Angeles and London.

Born in West Africa to foreign service parents and schooled at William & Mary, the voluble Mele, 31, recently bought a house in blue-collar Medford, which he shares with his wife and son. The latter, incidentally, born Jan. 3, already has his own Web site.

TWO YEARS AGO, at age 38, Susan Athey won one of the highest awards in academic economics, the John Bates Clark Medal. She was the first woman to do so.

Already famous in her field, Athey could soon become a household name: Her prize, given to economists under 40, is often considered a precursor to a Nobel.

Meanwhile, Athey, who lives with her husband and two children in Cambridge, teaches at Harvard and commutes to California as consultant to the chief economist at Microsoft (a position she previously held). Her niche is essentially the fundamentals of the marketplace, as in "game theory," which probes economic behavior in strategic situations, analyzing incentives and information for buyers and risks to sellers. In layman's terms: what makes people buy things, especially in an auction-based setting, from toxic assets to shares of GE.

As for the current freefall, Athey says deregulation was certainly at fault. But now, she warns, "Beware of perverse incentives within the solutions and the new regulations."

ABDI ALI'S SCOPE IS a virtual one-man humanities department. He is a playwright, prize-winning poet (protégé of former U.S. poet laureate Robert Pinsky), author and teacher at Boston's first and only visual and performing arts high school, the Boston Arts Academy. A Somali, Ali came to the States in 1983. He graduated from UMass Boston, has a master's from BU and is now nearly done with his doctorate in education at Harvard.

The father of two, Ali, 39, has been hailed as an "emerging leader" by the Boston Foundation and named a Boston Neighborhood Fellow by the city's Philanthropic Initiative. "He's an artist, scholar and citizen," says the Academy's co-headmaster, Linda Nathan.

Ali's doctoral dissertation will be the first study of what the arts mean to students in the inner city. "We need to know how these kids see the world," he says, "so we can help them best fit in it."

BETWEEN THE TIME we interviewed Jonah Lehrer and when this article was written, his new book, How We Decide, popped up on the Times' Best Sellers list. Happy to say we almost told you so. Lehrer, 27, who lives with his wife in South Boston, combined his passion for neuroscience and arts first as a double major at Columbia, then as a Rhodes Scholar, now as an editor for Seed magazine, which examines "big issues" in science and society.

More recently, the alt-hip Lehrer, who's authored the book, Proust Was a Neuroscientist, has drawn favorable comparisons to The New Yorker's Malcolm Gladwell as a provocative thinker.

"It's always surprised me how we take for granted the division of arts and science," Lehrer says. "I want to forge a new connection on how the mind works. By learning how we think, we can think better. We can learn which tools—the rational or the emotional—to use."

The Man Behind the Curtain

BY Jonathan Soroff PHOTOGRAPHS Peter Tannenbaum

IT'S NOT OVERSTATING the case to say that Nicholas Baume is in the vanguard of a movement to rid Boston of a bad rap it's had for roughly 100 years. As chief curator at the Institute of Contemporary Art, Baume has been slowly but surely reversing the perception of the city as a backwater for the avant-garde where only stodgy Brahmin collections are valued.

"The ICA is part of it," he says, with a whisper of an Australian accent, "but it takes a number of institutions to create that kind of environment. The List Visual Arts Center at MIT, Harvard [and] the MFA are all doing things. The Peabody Essex Museum just hired its first contemporary curator." (Not to mention the appointment of new directors Diane Paulus at the American Repertory Theatre, Peter DuBois at the Huntington Theatre and Veronique Le Melle at the Boston Center for the Arts).

In other words, it's an exciting time to be involved in contemporary art in Boston. There can be no better example of that than the ICA's instantly iconic building on the South Boston waterfront, where Baume (pronounced with a long "o," like the Swiss watch company) meets me in the lobby. Designed by the white-hot architecture firm of Diller Scofidio + Renfro and open for three years next December, the ICA beat the MFA and the Gardner to the punch in erecting new space (even if those museums do have Pritzker Prize winners Sir Norman Foster and Renzo Piano designing their new additions). Moreover, the ICA was an instant hit with the public.

"It's an amazing building," says Baume, whose first museum job was in his native Sydney, looking directly across the harbor at one of the world's most recognizable pieces of architecture, the Opera House. "The ICA is unique, and the exhibition space is completely functional." (Essentially an empty box, the interior walls can be completely reconfigured or removed depending on the exhibit.) "It has proportion, diffused natural light, flexibility. That's unlike Gehry's Bilbao Guggenheim, or even the Tate Modern in London. The Tate did what we've done by bringing people back to a waterfront they had turned their backs on, but it's still a retro-fitted power station."

He says all this as we tour Shepard Fairey's exhibit, another illustration of the ICA's place in the new cultural order. Not only did the show get a positive response from the art world, but it managed to generate international buzz when the L.A.-based Fairey, known for his graffiti, was arrested by Boston Police for vandalism on outstanding warrants... on his way to the ICA to DJ a party celebrating his opening. (Could there be a more apt metaphor for old vs. new?)

Regarding the controversy—which many claim was a publicity stunt—Baume says, "I understand our system has laws, and we operate on that basis. But the way it was handled was at the very least insensitive. Hard to follow their thinking. It was probably an ordeal for Shepard, but it's been great publicity for us."

Baume has the sort of low-key, pragmatic and dead-pan manner that reminds one of a classics professor. If he weren't such a sharp dresser and a quick wit, one might mistake him for one of those hidebound types who saddled Boston with its dusty image in the art world to begin with—those conservative cultural leaders who never ventured outside their comfort zone after a brief flirtation with modernism and a period of superb connoisseurship following the Civil War. (Hence all those Monets and other Impressionists at the MFA).

"A lot of people were a bit patronizing about Boston's interest in contemporary art," Baume says, "But I think we've proved them wrong pretty dramatically. Attendance and response to shows have been incredible, and donations very generous."

He would know, since a good deal of his time revolves around courting board members and potential donors and traveling with them to art shows like the Venice Biennale, Art Basel and other fairs, and studio and gallery visits to New York, Berlin, L.A. and other hot art spots.

"It's my favorite part of the job," he says. "I have an unbelievably privileged position. I get paid to work with incredibly creative people and help expose others to their work. To travel and look at art: I pinch myself to think I'm lucky enough to have the job I do."

The trajectory he took to get there was fairly straightforward: Catholic school, the University of Sydney (where he earned an honors degree in fine arts and philosophy), working as a private curator for one of Australia's leading collectors (textile magnate John Kaldor, whom Baume refers to as "my art godfather") and a stint at Sydney's Museum of Contemporary Art, beginning in 1993, as its first curator of public programs and exhibitions. In 1998, at the age of 33, he accepted a position at the Wadsworth Athenaeum in Hartford, Conn., "because of its strong tradition as a very avant-garde, progressive place." The ICA lured him further north in 2003, with the promise of the new building.

Gay and currently single, he lives in the South End and bicycles to work when the weather allows (and for an Aussie, he's remarkably sanguine about that aspect of living here). The youthfulness with which he wears his 43 years is probably due to the fact that he views his life "like an ongoing graduate seminar, learning about artists, movements and periods."

His decisions help guide the museum in all its acquisitions—an especially exciting prospect, given that the ICA didn't start its permanent collection until it moved into its new home.

"Of course, I answer to Jill [Medvedow, the museum's director]. We have a collections committee that meets, and I'll propose a new acquisition. Then they vote whether or not to recommend it to the board. And the board has ultimate approval."

Ironically, Baume himself is not a collector, "either temperamentally or in terms of resources," so one can only imagine how enjoyable it must be to perform his job at this particular moment in time.

"Every generation wants to reinvent art for itself," he says, "but often, art is born more out of adversity and challenge than luxury and abundance, so it will be interesting to see how the global financial crisis and the politics that result will affect the art world."

Taking a sip of coffee, he says, "The great thing about art is that it's sensual, cerebral, physical and emotional." Not many people describe their jobs that way. Following lunch at Sportello, Baume and I walk back to the ICA, passing along the way one of Shepard Fairey's caricatures of wrestler Andre the Giant spray-painted on the side of a former factory.

Apologizing for having to meet his 3 o'clock appointment, he says, "We're helping to create a new environment in this city." And despite the fact that we're standing on the waterfront in South Boston, his words feel like a breath of fresh air. ×××

It's an exciting time to be involved in contemporary art in Boston. There can be no better example of that than the ICA's instantly iconic building on the South Boston waterfront.

Hairstylist & bartender Danielle Benson redefines girly girl style.

By Amanda Knorr
Photographs by Conor Doherty

DANIELLE BENSON has given up pants. "I don't wear them. Ever," declares the 30-year-old stylist at Dellaria Salon and bartender at the Paradise Rock Club. She deals with Boston's ever-changing seasons by wearing shorter or longer dresses—and that's it. Even tights are questionable. "I wore that one camping recently," she says, pointing to a polka-dotted mini dress.

If it's froofy, pink and has hearts all over, Benson wants it. If it's designed by Betsey Johnson, it's a done deal. Her love for the ultra-feminine runs so deep she's made it a permanent fixture on her body, with tattoos ranging from cupcakes to butterflies and roses. Considering her two lines of work, it makes sense that Benson be 50 percent girly girl and 50 percent rock 'n' roll. As we discuss her wardrobe, she reminds me that being lady-like doesn't mean you have to be prim and proper.

What do you look for when you shop?

When I go shopping, I only look for dresses and skirts. I love crinoline and puffy dresses. I wear a lot of party dresses on non-party days. Basically I like to look like a cupcake—lots of pink and ruffley. [But] I dress them down with sneakers. I try to find patterned outfits like stripes, polka dots and gingham—I'm very girly, but I don't like to look slutty.

Where can we find you shopping?

I love Betsey Johnson and Marc Jacobs. I like the idea of vintage stores but I hate digging through stuff. I like Gap and Urban Outfitters for basic black dresses.

How did your style come to be?

I think I've always been pretty girly. I wanted to do hair and makeup when I went to college, so I dropped out and went to cosmetology school. I went to Japan a couple years ago, and I loved some of the fancy dresses in the stores. I decided when I got back I would buy fancier dresses. At that point I was really into skirts. I had way too many so I kept them in containers under my bed.

How many dresses and skirts do you own?

My friends and I counted and at one point I had 300 skirts. I'm probably down to 100 skirts now. Dresses? Maybe 50. Plus [approximately] 25 Betsey Johnson ones.

What do you do when it's absolutely freezing in Boston?

I wear a longer coat! [Laughs.] That's how I winterize.

But why no pants?

The whole no pants thing started a couple of years ago. I lasted until Christmas in skirts, and I thought, I went this long so let's see if I can do it all winter. I pretend it's not cold. Sometimes it doesn't work. Normally I throw on yoga pants to get to work, then I change if it's really cold!

How does your body art convey your personal style?

My tattoos totally represent me. [They're] super girly and feminine. I like cutesy things: lollipops and cupcakes, hearts and butterflies. Most of my tattoos are pretty unique, like my dresses.

You're entire right arm has a heart-theme going on!

Hearts represent love, and I love love. I get the same feeling when I put on a new dress: super-happiness. I will buy anything with hearts on it. I have an unhealthy obsession with [them]. Valentine's Day is my favorite holiday. I even named my dog Valentina.

Do you see pants in your future?

LITTLE MAN, BIG BANG

ONLY CHUCK PALAHNIUK can make literary tales of insomniac soap-making anarchists and world-record-breaking porn stars into best-selling books (and sometimes blockbuster films) like Fight Club and Snuff. Join him at the Brattle Theatre on May 8 as he reads from his latest novel, Pygmy, which revisits similar dark and nihilistic subjects. Pygmy follows a tiny terrorist who gets a hearty dose of Americana as a foreign-exchange student living with a nice Christian family in the Midwest. The small man's plan: Kill millions in a large-scale act of terrorism at a Washington, D.C., science fair to prove even little guys can send a superpower into complete chaos. Get there early. Palahniuk is known to draw crowds.

SCOTT GREENAN

reads and signs copies of his latest novel at the Brattle Theatre on May 8. Tickets to the 4:15 pm signing are $27, including a copy of Pygmy. Tickets to the 7 pm reading are $5.

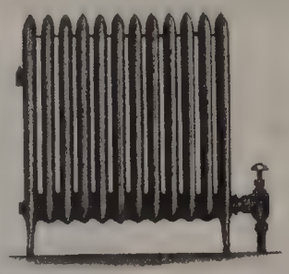
What a Prick



Wake-Up Call If you thought your last paper cut was bad, imagine gouging your finger on a spinning wheel and ending up with pseudo-narcolepsy. Charles Perrault's oft-adapted tale about a princess getting royally screwed by a wicked fairy is, well, pretty tired. Boston Ballet's production of The Sleeping Beauty proves it doesn't take true love's kiss to breathe new life into familiar fodder. The performance honors the original in a way no animated film ever could, using elaborate costumes and fresh choreography to stick it right in Walt Disney's cryogenically frozen face. It's lights out for the production at the Citi Performing Arts Center's Wang Theatre on May 3, so be sure to catch it before the last tutu twirls.

for homes with hot water or steam radiator heat

If a home doesn't have forced air heat, installing ductwork for central air conditioning can mean major remodeling and expense. But a Unique Indoor Comfort ® system doesn't require large metal ductwork,or major remodeling.

Cool air is delivered through small 2" flexible tubing that can easily be weaved through walls and ceilings, around studs and other obstacles. All that's visible are small round outlets in every room. What's more, Unique Indoor Comfort ® offers Lennox high efficiency equipment.

Proven in thousands of homes, easy to install Unique Indoor Comfort ® is the central air conditioning solution for the older home.

Adventureland ★★★★ A familiar story told with surprising delicacy, Greg Mottola's autobiographical coming-of-age tale feels like a John Hughes movie directed by François Truffaut. Set in a pitch-perfect 1987, Adventureland stars Jesse Eisenberg as a pompous Renaissance studies major forced to take a dead-end job at a ramshackle Pittsburgh amusement park after a family financial setback torpedoes his post-collegiate plans. Smitten with Kristen Stewart's boozy, broken Em, and unaware of her affair with the park's married sleazebag maintenance man (Ryan Reynolds), he drifts through a lazy summer's worth of go-nowhere days and dashed hopes, learning first-hand lessons about heartbreak along the way. We've seen this story dozens of times before, but Adventureland is suffused with a beguiling sense of melancholy that feels heartfelt and true. Mottola tones down the broad, raunchy comedy that made his 2007 Superbad a smash and aims for something quieter and more affecting. In the end, it's the story of a kid discovering that the world is a much smaller, sadder place than he'd ever imagined. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Coraline ★★★ Neil Gaiman's psychologically spiky novella gets a fairly faithful rendering from gifted stop-motion animator Henry Selick, who previously tickled eyeballs with his beloved The Nightmare Before Christmas and the terrific but underrated James and the Giant Peach. Voiced without much gusto by Dakota Fanning, our title lass is a neglected only child who happens upon a secret tunnel leading to an alternate universe where doppelgängers of her distracted parents are suddenly affectionate and doting. Of course, they do have buttons for eyes, but that's probably the least creepy thing about them. A psychedelic trip down a dark rabbit hole of youthful anxieties, Coraline is never less than a visual marvel, even when Gaiman's leaps of dream-logic become more head-scratching than mind-blowing. If you have the option, I'd check out the 3-D version, which wisely foregoes the usual gimmicky gotcha effects and instead uses the wondrous Real D technology to further envelop you in Selick's richly detailed, carefully rendered world. Also, it's nice to see a heroic cat, for a change. (In the suburbs.)

Duplicity ★★★ ½ Tony Gilroy's sophomore feature is so breezy with classic Hollywood charm, one might not even notice how cynical it is. Clive Owen stars as an MI6 sellout who ditched Her Majesty's secret service for a more lucrative career spying on frozen-pizza patent disputes. He's got a bad history with Julia Roberts' CIA bombshell, and Gilroy's film rather ingeniously eliminates any real-world stakes in setting these two working at cross-purposes for vainglorious lotion CEOs played by Tom Wilkinson and the amazing Paul Giamatti. Or are they up to something else entirely? Leapfrogging back and forth through time, Duplicity is a tricky, sophisticated affair that demands your undivided attention. The giddiness comes from the pleasure these actors take in Gilroy's dialogue, whether it's his rapid-fire banter or some juicy sidewinding monologues. Telling lies for a living takes a toll, and Duplicity asks: How do you love someone after you've discovered they're as full of crap as you are? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Fast & Furious ★★★ Forget Brokeback Mountain. The best male love story of recent years was 2001's street-racing sleeper The Fast and the Furious, wherein Vin Diesel and Paul Walker ignored their girlfriends and made goo-goo eyes at one another while driving 120 mph. (There hadn't been such a gleefully homoerotic coupling in a blockbuster since Iceman snapped his teeth at Maverick in Top Gun.) Their careers in shambles, the original cast has reunited for this fourth installment of this guilty-pleasure franchise, which characteristically favors speed over logic and demonstrates a sly awareness of its own absurdity. Diesel's outlaw driver again teams up with Walker's undercover Fed, and they eye each other longingly while taking down a drug lord drag racing heroin shipments on the Mexican border. Deftly directed by Justin Lin, it's campy, turbo-charged nonsense. But how can you resist recurring shots of Diesel folding his Popeye arms in front of a towering, pumping oil rig. Paging Dr. Freud! (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Gomorrah ★★ Matteo Garrone's pitiless expose of Italy's Neapolitan Mafia is full of despair and sobering statistics. Unlike their romanticized neighbors in Sicily's La Cosa Nostra, the Camorra has no illusions about tradition, honor or any

PLAYED STRAIGHT

State of Play is effective but predictable.

State of Play
★★½
Starring Russell Crowe, Ben Affleck, Rachel McAdams, Jeff Daniels, Jason Bateman and Helen Mirren. Screenplay by Matthew Michael Carnahan, Tony Gilroy and Billy Ray. Directed by Kevin Macdonald. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

GETTING FAT WAS THE BEST thing that ever happened to Russell Crowe.

Sure, we all fondly remember the phone-throwing intensity of his hunky Gladiator days, but beefing up and mellowing out has worked wonders for the one-time heartthrob. Much like Alec Baldwin (another fine actor with a short fuse and a weakness for the dessert menu), the added girth has brought out a playful side in Crowe's performances. Judging from his delightful, loopy turns in 3:10 to Yuma, Body of Lies and now the otherwise underwhelming State of Play, it would appear that the extra chin has liberated Crowe from his tedious leading man vanity of that Don Corleone junk. There's nothing here but money and murder. Working from a best seller by Roberto Saviano (who shares a screenwriting credit) Garrone traces this vile gang's reach through every level of society, from everyday street toughs, through haute couture sweatshops, all the way to toxic-waste dumps that poison an already dying community. But while Gomorrah is structurally impressive, it's also emotionally inert. Admirably avoiding sentimental mob movie clichés, Garrone forgets to offer anything in their place. The movie is a sociological study taken from such a jaundiced distance that there's nothing for us to latch onto. The characters are nasty, shallow people whose inevitable deaths come as a relief to the audience. Sure it's informative and well researched, but it's a grind. (At Kendall Square.)

Gran Torino ★★★ ½ A throwback to Clint Eastwood's cheap and dirty '80s crowd-pleasers, Gran Torino looks like it was shot over the course of a long weekend and cost about $15 to make. It's also extremely entertaining. Eastwood plays a growling, bigoted Korean War vet who gradually warms to a family of Hmong immigrants living next door. As he sputters, spits and cusses his way through scenes, this mean, old dog learns a few new tricks. The movie is pitched at the same hyperbolic level as Eastwood's oversized turn. Designed as his farewell to acting, the movie plays like catnip for longtime fans. There's a valedictory air to the work, studded with explicit references to characters like Harry Callahan, Gunny Highway and Josey Wales. Like his other films, Gran Torino has some satisfying shades of moral uncertainty lurking beneath the surface. But viewers will also get a giddy thrill of seeing a 78-year-old badass pulling a gun on gangbangers and snarling, "Get off my lawn." (In the suburbs.)

He's Just Not That Into You ★★ ½ Unexpectedly tough-minded and insightful for a fair stretch of its running time, director Ken Kwapis' adaptation of Greg Behrendt and Liz Tuccillo's best-selling self-help book starts out with both feet planted firmly on the ground instead of head over heels. The film takes a dim view of the dating scene, as Ginnifer Goodwin's high-strung serial clinger learns some hard lessons from Justin Long's bartender lothario. There's a surprisingly eccentric turn from Jennifer Connelly as a suspicious housewife whose hubby (Bradley Cooper) is enjoying too many late-night yoga lessons with Scarlett Johansson. Even Ben Affleck and Jennifer Aniston are decent for a change, playing a long-term couple wondering what it really means to be married. How infuriating then to watch the last half hour undercut the previous 90 minutes of bitter truths. Shoehorning these characters into one sappy Hollywood ending after another and selling itself short for chick-flick clichés, He's Just Not That Into You cops out and decides that he really is. (In the suburbs.)

Knowing ★ M. Night Shyamalan doesn't have to feel so ashamed anymore. Dopey even by the relaxed standards of Nicolas Cage movies, Alex Proyas' dunderheaded doomsday tale casts the over-actor as a grieving MIT professor prone to hysteria and fits of atheistic petulance. This presents a problem when his young son happens upon a 50-year-old piece of notebook paper containing numerical codes for every man-made or natural disaster from the past five decades, which leaves the boozed-up Dr. Nic to unlock the exact time and place of the impending apocalypse. Around the margins are a bunch of blond guys in trench coats looking like refugees from the 80s' band Wang Chung and attempt-and allowed him to indulge in the oddball choices of a character actor.

His goofy performance is the best reason to see State of Play, an iffy Beltway conspiracy thriller awkwardly condensed from a six-hour BBC miniseries by a team of screenwriters both talented (Michael Clayton's Tony Gilroy, Shattered Glass' Billy Ray) and lacking (Lions for Lambs' Matthew Michael Carnahan). Crowe breathes life into a rather ludicrous, if irresistible, stereotype named Cal McAffrey, a hard-drinking, hard-boiled newspaperman whose personal life may be in shambles, but who always gets the scoop by deadline. With his stringy '70s rocker mane and scrappy, untucked dishevelment, Crowe's an analog relic, and the only reporter in D.C. who still uses a notebook instead of a Blackberry.

In case you haven't heard, times are a bit tough for the newspaper industry. Crowe's broadsheet, the fictional Washington Globe, has just been bought out by a conglomerate that, in the words of Helen Mirren's grizzled editor, "foolishly expects the paper to turn a profit." Adding insult to injury, Cal's stuck showing the newsroom ropes to chirpy young blogger Della Frye (Rachel McAdams). The sassy young lady not only wastes bandwidth posting gossip and innuendo, Della's also so inexperienced that she doesn't even carry a pen.

A story breaks when the beautiful young assistant to Ben Affleck's showboating congressman Stephen Collins leaps in front of the D.C. Metro during rush hour. Collins was just about to convene hearings investigating the actions of PointCorp, a Blackwater-esque mercenary operation that's made a fortune in Afghanistan and Iraq, leaving a trail of civilian bodies in its wake. Suffice it to say, now is not an opportune time for lurid details of Collins' extramarital affair with his suicidal assistant to be splashed all over Ms. Frye's blog.

Faster than you can say "conflict of interest," Cal McAffrey is snooping around the story, as he and Congressman Collins were once college roommates. The near-decade age difference between the actors is never addressed, but that isn't as much a problem as their complete lack of chemistry. Crowe is light on his feet and hits every line just a few beats off from what you were expecting. Affleck, alas, is again giving one of his dour, constipated Pearl Harbor performances, jutting out his underbite to indicate inner turmoil. He's a bore, and it's hard to believe these two could stomach one another's company for more than five minutes, let alone a lifelong friendship.

Crowe's McCaffrey behaves more like a cop than a reporter, particularly when he's bullying Jason Bateman's sleazy sex-fiend into a taped confession. Preposterous as it may be, this strikingly well-acted sequence proves Bateman capable of a lot more than comedy. Initially haughty and amusing, his addled, panicked breakdown becomes a mini-aria of clammy despair.

State of Play cruises along at an agreeable pace and piles on a few unsurprising plot twists with the brisk efficiency of an airport paperback. Will anybody really wonder if this whole Collins mess is going to somehow tie in with that homeless guy we saw executed over a mysterious briefcase during the opening credits? Or what about when an actor as famous as Jeff Daniels is hanging around in the background without having much to do for an hour or so? Do you think he might be involved?

Despite the tired genre tropes, State of Play works as an elegy for old-school newspaper mythology. Riddled with comical inaccuracies, it's hardly a savvy exposé about the ailing industry. Instead the filmmakers seem more interested in saluting, maybe for the last time, those retro reporter archetypes like McAffrey, or allowing Mirren's hard-scrabble editor to literally stop the presses. Even McAdams' heretic blogger winds up waxing nostalgic about feeling "newsprint on your fingers."

The closing credits mournfully follow Cal's big scoop through every slow step of the printing process, set to Creedence Clearwater Revival's "Long As I Can See the Light," for maximum pathos. By that point, only a party pooper would point out that this earth-shattering story would've broken online and via cable news hours before. ✖✖✖

ing to abduct children for mysterious purposes. Knowing is ridiculous and offensive, smuggling a fear-mongering religious agenda into multiplexes beneath a veneer of CGI effects and disaster porn. Cage's comical caterwauling can only distract for so long, and the film eventually feels like the big-budget version of one of Kirk Cameron's Left Behind movies. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Monsters Vs. Aliens ★★★ Like a snarky little offshoot of Pixar's crew of bona fide artistes, DreamWorks Animation tends to specialize in pop-culture references and dated inside jokes aimed at the long-suffering parents in the audience. Its latest endeavor will never be confused with Wall-E, but at least it's a cohesive piece that boasts a charmingly 50s' retro sensibility and some dazzling 3-D effects. Reese Witherspoon voices an unlucky bride struck by a meteorite, now horrified to find herself growing seven stories tall and quarantined in a secret government facility with a bunch of icky monsters. Once aliens attack, these outcasts become America's last line of defense. There's some very funny voice work by Hugh Laurie as the world's smartest cockroach, while Seth Rogen is typecast as an amorphous, dimwitted blob. As was bound to happen sooner or later, Stephen Colbert plays the president. See the IMAX 3-D presentation, which distracts from any screenwriting weaknesses with a healthy dose of eye candy. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Observe and Report ★★ ½ For anybody who thought Taxi Driver just wasn't funny enough, writer/director Jody Hill's sophomore effort works a sick comedic riff on Scorsese and De-Niro's seminal antihero. Except this time Travis Bickle is played by Seth Rogen, and he's a mall security guard. Paul Blart this is not. Rogen bravely throws himself into the role of a delusional bully taking a break from his prescription medicines just long enough to grow dangerously obsessed with rescuing Anna Faris' dim cosmetics girl from a serial flasher. There's a thin line between hilarious and creepy, and it's a line Observe and Report seems proud to ignore. Much like Hill's cult favorite The Foot Fist Way, it's a tale of puffed-up machismo mocked by an indifferent suburban wasteland. The commitment to mortification grates on the nerves, but at least it's a distinct vision. Then comes the climax, a sequence so magnificently sustained with a punch line so wrong it's impossible not to forgive just about everything that came before. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Sugar ★★★ ½ Gorgeous and understated, the latest film from Half Nelson writer/directors Anna Boden and Ryan Fleck follows Miguel "Sugar" Santos (Algenis Perez Soto), a promising pitcher from the Dominican Republic who finds himself ground in the gears of Major League Baseball's recruiting system. Avoiding what we've come to expect from a typical sports movie, Sugar has no interest in cliché climaxes like a ninth-inning strikeout. It's a film about the day-to-day mechanics of a sports industry and what it feels like to be an outsider in America. With a tenuous grasp on the English language, Sugar and his teammates find themselves dropped in a small baseball-crazy town in Iowa, and the inevitable culture clash is rendered with uncommon sensitivity. In fact, my one quibble with Sugar is that the film may be a bit too sensitive. This is such a gentle, compassionate picture, a little crassness may have given it more dramatic punch. But how often does one complain that a movie is too thoughtful? (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Sunshine Cleaning ★★ Misleadingly sold as a wacky romp from the people who brought you Little Miss Sunshine, director Christine Jeffs' latest is a muted, melancholy affair with strong performances from Amy Adams and Emily Blunt. The two play depressingly dysfunctional sisters who start their own crime-scene cleanup business as a way to stave off poverty. At least for a little while, the movie boasts a plainspoken sadness and a poignant sense of day-to-day drudgery. But first-timer Megan Holley's screenplay isn't content to leave well enough alone, piling on predictable late-movie revelations and a rash of melodramatic contrivances that only serve to undercut the acting. The great Alan Arkin phones this one in by recycling his goofy grandpa shtick to diminishing returns. He belongs in a different movie, one that's taking place hundreds of miles away from Adams' sorrowful smile. Sunshine Cleaning's patently false, upbeat ending feels not just like a cheat, but a betrayal. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Taken ★★ ½ Here's another slick, lurid thriller from writer/producer Luc Besson in which the French director employs his trademark blend of brutal action sequences and mawkish sentimentality. It's a tricky mix that Besson got just right in 1994's The Professional, but he's found diminishing returns ever since. Liam Neeson stars as a retired CIA assassin turned overprotective dad. He blanches at his precious teenage daughter's wishes to follow U2 across Europe, and it turns out father really does knows best, because young Kim (Maggie Grace) has barely stepped off the plane in Paris when she's kidnapped by snarling Albanian sex traffickers. What follows is a brisk procession of ass-whoopings, with towering, tree-trunk Neeson snapping limbs and tossing corpses all along the Seine. It's completely preposterous and more than a little stupid, but director Pierre Morel knows his way around a fight sequence, and his burly leading man injects a surprising gravitas to a one-note, Jack Bauer knockoff. Neeson's early monologue, threatening his daughter's kidnappers, is itself almost worth the price of admission. (In the suburbs.)

Two Lovers ★★★ ½ Awash in romantic ambivalence and pained, inarticulated yearning, director James Gray's roiling melodrama should probably be considered ridiculous. While I concede that the film is fairly absurd and overwrought, I also found it impossible not to be swept up in its gonzo sincerity, tickled by the eccentric humor and dazzled by Gray's lush stretches of cinematic elegance. Joaquin Phoenix stars as a heartsick, bumbling mess who recently reclaimed his childhood bedroom in his parents' insular Brighton Beach neighborhood. He quickly finds himself courted by Vinessa Shaw's nurturing model of stability, but also pulled by the allure of Gwyneth Paltrow's druggy, shiksa basket case. Boasting a bold, go-for-broke performance by Phoenix and some uncharacteristically rough-edged work from Paltrow, the operatic Two Lovers allows its performers to conjure the heedless rush of true romance, while Gray's directorial rigor keeps the proceedings detached and clear-eyed enough to question whether their ardor is the effect of immature delusion. (In the suburbs.)

Fernando Calzada

Saccharine

Pitchmen Satisfying but a bit too sweet, Sugar follows a young Dominican pitcher in the States.

Tyson ★★★ Sometimes objectivity is overrated. You won't find outsider perspectives or differing viewpoints in director James Toback's compelling portrait of the deeply troubled former heavyweight champion. Tyson is Iron Mike in his own words. Culled from countless hours of interviews with the battered bruiser, it's a first-person history of one of the strangest, saddest flameouts in all of professional sports. From his harrowing start pulling preteen Brooklyn drug hustles through his subsequent reformation under the tutelage of trainer Cus D'Amato, the boxer's reflections are quite funny and often shocking in their candor. (Who knew he won the title while suffering from gonorrhea?) Then comes the fall. Before long we're well into the rape conviction, the ear biting and the freakshow tattoos, and Toback begins fragmenting the frame into split-screens and multiple audio loops to reflect his subject's mounting paranoia. Of course this is all more than a little blinkered and self-serving, but boxing's last superstar is nonetheless a tragic, riveting narrator, his tangled syntax alone a wonder to behold. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Watchmen ★★ ½ A landmark 12-volume doorstop written by Alan Moore, Watchmen is something like the Finnegan's Wake of superhero comics. Filmmakers like Terry Gilliam, Darren Aronofsky and Paul Greengrass have all tried and failed to adapt it over the years, leaving 300 director Zack Snyder stuck wrestling Watchmen's meaty monologues and massive backstory into a crowd-pleasing blockbuster entertainment. He gets about halfway there. Set in an alternate 1985, in which Nixon is serving his fifth term and the Cold War is heating up, the tangled tale finds a long-dormant band of caped crusaders spurred back into action by the murder of one of their own. The screenplay is undone by the stubborn density of the source material as it takes the film over an hour just to establish the players and their histories before the story can even get started. I doubt it will even make any sense to anyone who hasn't read the comic. (In the suburbs.)

CULT STATUS

Akron/Family plays the Middle East Downstairs May 5.

Sebastian Mlynarski

AKRON/FAMILY KNOWS how to expand the clan. Last year at Harpers Ferry, the Brooklyn-based trio enlisted tour opener Megafaun to double its ranks for a transcendent set. At other times, the band has picked participants from the audience or led entire rooms in singing and clapping.

"Night to night is going to be different, based on many factors, one of them being how willing the crowd is to go with you, how onboard they are," drummer Dana Janssen says.

But the band is also learning to add by subtraction, a process that began in 2007 when tour-weary guitarist

Ryan Vanderhoof left the original quartet. Janssen, guitarist Seth Olinsky and bassist Miles Seaton chose to split the vocal and instrumental duties to retain their fluid mix of psychedelic rock, pastoral folk and free jazz.

"We used to be much more hands-on with the crowd, passing out shakers and pulling people onstage and challenging them to sing," Janssen says. "But I don't want it to become a shtick, where it gets to be expected. The thing I loved about the participation was that it was very spontaneous."

Instead, Akron/Family is channeling spontaneity through its three-piece configuration. "It's nice now to just play the music," he says. "You've got a lot more responsibility as far as sonic space is concerned. It's 'All aboard, just jump on and hang on.'"

The band certainly seems unconstrained on Set 'Em Wild, Set 'Em Free, which arrives in stores May 5, the same date that Akron/Family plays the Middle East Downstairs. In fact, the group sounds both as accessible and experimental as ever on the self-produced disc, which bridges acoustic delicacy and electric squall with kaleidoscopic glee.

The six-minute opener "Everyone Is Guilty" sets the tone with a bouncy, serpentine groove that suggests a mash of King Crimson and African music until a Beatlesque chaser capped by orchestral icing from guest horns and strings.

"It's nice now to just play the music. It's 'All aboard, just jump on and hang on.'"

"I've been a huge fan of African music for years," says Janssen, 28, citing Fela Kuti, Ali Farka Touré and Toumani Diabaté among influences shared with his band mates. "We have all been listening to it so much that it invariably comes out in your playing."

An electronic mood creeps in with distorted Fender Rhodes piano spiraling over the spongy bass and skittering drum machine of "Creatures," which levels out into choral folk and the sound of crickets and crows. It's a perfect segue into the album's acoustic center, which Janssen dubs "the couch set," allowing him to indulge his share of multi-instrumental whims on lap steel and string bass.

"The Alps & Their Orange Evergreen" even settles for old-fashioned harmonica and folk guitar, although few of the CD's tracks follow one path throughout—and structures are bound to mutate onstage. "That's something really neat about artists like Bob Dylan or the Grateful Dead," says Janssen, "the ability to have freedom with their tunes."

Then, just when the disc seems to have settled into more calm than cacophony, Akron/Family shifts into the rocking "MBF," which he acknowledges as "sonic bombardment."

"The idea was just to combine something like [Miles Davis'] Bitches Brew and Black Flag and see what happens," Janssen says from his Brooklyn home, adding that he would have preferred to leave it off the album. "I like the idea of it as a live piece, something to be experienced in person."

Extremes are a way of life with Akron/Family. But Janssen doesn't agree with the idea that the band can come off as schizophrenic.

"It's natural and expansive," says Janssen, who grew up with Olinsky in central Pennsylvania (none of them hail from Akron, which he says was "phonetically pleasing" in the group's name). "Schizophrenia implies that there's a lack of control." Then he pauses and adds, "There is a willingness to let it fall apart if it goes there."

In turn, the group's lyrics about love, light, space and nature (especially the mantra-like chants found on 2007's Love Is Simple) can bring to mind a hippie cult. It's an impression only boosted in a communal concert setting.

"The spirit of community—unity and community—that's more about what we're preaching as opposed to any sort of religious or overly spiritual aspect," Janssen says. "I like to think of it as a safe place we have to create." ✖✖✖

Noah's Art

Animal Control If there's one trend indie-rockers love to follow, it's naming their bands after mammals. Noah and the Whale follows in the footsteps of their buddies Fleet Foxes, Grizzly Bear and Band of Horses. But while they nominally blend in with the zoo crowd, the British quartet set themselves apart as soon as they take the stage. Often compared to artists like Sufjan Stevens and the Moldy Peaches, Noah and the Whale's folk-pop maintains its identity by pairing a fiddle, acoustic guitars, whistles, claps and harmonies with cheery lyrics. The style shines in their first single, "5 Years Time," which was played more than a million times on their MySpace page, vaulting them into Internet stardom. The hype allowed the band to release its debut LP, Peaceful, the World Lays Me Down and strike out on a U.S. mini-tour. The band appears at the Paradise Rock Club on April 29. Sounds like a whale of a time. Thais Collins

Don't Lose Your Patients

Casper, It Ain't Sarah Waters is known for cleverly tucking lesbian themes into the pages of her corset-busting Victorian novels, but once in a while, even the fairest lady needs to shake things up. The Little Stranger, her novel set in 1940s England, takes readers to Hundreds Hall, where the house call of an inquisitive doctor opens the door to mystery and spooktacular mayhem. Waters uses ghosts to examine social anxieties at the end of World War II, as people became more liberated. As the doctor's infatuation with the family grows deeper, things only get creepier. Think The Turn of the Screw, flipped on its head. Waters appears May 1 at the Brattle Theatre. Kyle Wright

IMPROPER Sightings!

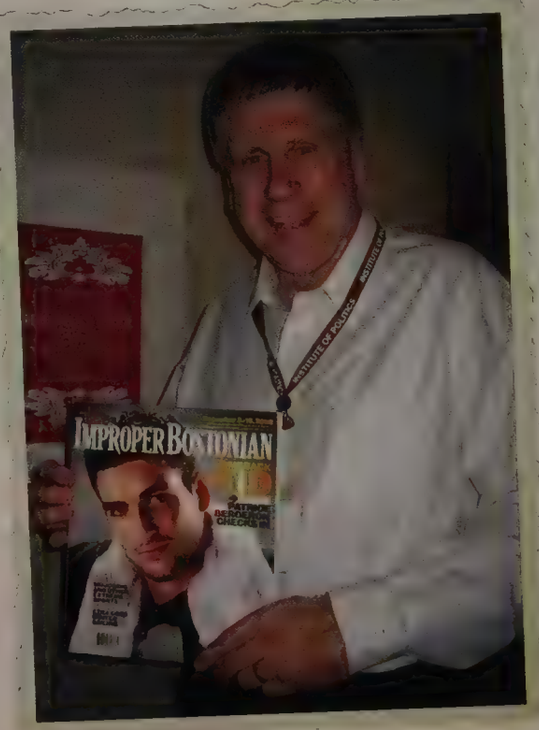
ATTENTION BOUNTY HUNTERS! BONUS POINTS TO ANYONE WHO CAN CAPTURE AN IMPROPER READER DRESSED AS JONATHAN BRANDIS IN LADYBUGS AT THE DRAG OLYMPICS, HELD MAY 1 IN LONDON, ENGLAND

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip. Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.



A bundled-up Colin Daly brought our Local Eats issue to Gulfoss, Iceland, where the one dish on everyone's menu is hypothermia.

Joan Ahmadjian (right) met TV chef Lidia Matticchio Bastianich at the Boston Wine Expo. Lidia is our third favorite celebrity chef, but only because Dom DeLuise takes up the first two spots by himself.

For years, we nurse the Sightings tree until it bears fruit. Then, we handpick every photo individually. Like this one, of Maria Paula Serna and Cliff at the Juan Valdez Café in Bogotá.

SAMURAI BOSTON [827 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-236-7672. www.samurai-boston.com] From the toro to the Pink Lady maki, every bite melts in your mouth. Samurai Boston offers innovative rolls and martinis that are a nice change for those bored with traditional styles, but don't worry if someone in your party isn't a raw fish fan, Samurai Boston offers an extensive menu of Korean and Japanese cuisine. Located in the Back Bay, across the street from the entrance to the Prudential, Samurai Boston is open daily for lunch and dinner.

SCOLLAY SQUARE [21 Beacon Street, Boston, 617-742-4900. www.scollaysquare.com] Scollay Square is warm and inviting, featuring American comfort food and a sophisticated cocktail list at reasonable prices. A neighborhood bistro-style restaurant, we are a great meeting place for friends to eat, drink and socialize. New chef Jason Stump creates mouth watering daily specials, just introduced for the 2009 season. The menu also features a 3 course menu, served nightly, for $22.00. Join us weekdays for lunch, all week for dinner and Sundays for brunch and our famous "Make Your Own Bloody Mary Bar".

SORELLINA [One Huntington Avenue, Boston, 617-412-4600. www.sorellinaboston.com] Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Robert Jean prepare contemporary regional Italian/Mediterranean food in this sophisticated setting in Copley Square. Matching the creative cuisine is a warm-modern design highlighted by a glowing mural and expansive floor-to-ceiling windows. Settle into soft leather upholstery and enjoy the finely-crafted room that's welcoming, comfortable and elegant. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TAVERN ON THE WATER [Pier 6, Charlestown Navy Yard, 617-242-8040. www.tavernonthewater.com] Tavern on the Water is known for its summer days but is open year round. It has free parking all winter long; the view is the same and features special menu items during the winter months. Yes they even have tablecloths and all glassware during the winter. How about a bottle of Cakebread Chard for only $65.00? When the warm weather hits it is the place to be with its outside 200 seat patio facing the Boston skyline.

TEATRO [177 Tremont Street, Boston, 617-778-6841. www.teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Executive Chef Robert Jean's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call -- a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

BIDDING FOR BOYS AND BALLERINAS

The Only Thing Missing Was a Dreidel...

Twenty dollars might seem like a lot for a cupcake, but when it buys you a chance to win a private dinner for 10 at Capital Grille, it's worth it.

That was only part of the fun and games at the gala for Jewish Family and Children's Services, held at the Mandarin Oriental.

There were the obligatory cocktails and sit-down dinner and live and silent auctions, but there were also carnival games with prizes several notches above shaggy stuffed animals.

Present and accounted for were real estate magnate Steve Weiner and the stunning Roberta, their son, Adam, and his flawless wife, Rita, their daughter, cochair Melissa Janfaza and her other half, Andrew, the evening's honoree, Irving Rabb, hedge fund big shot Jeff Cutter and his blonde bombshell wife, Jodie, the effervescent Amy and Andy Sukoff, retail royalty Nunzio Bellofatto and the irresistible Dan Mullin, who saved me from complete mortification by bidding $100 for a night on the town with yours truly. (Most hookers get more, but I appreciate it, Danny!)

Overheard following dinner: One woman scolded her husband, saying, "Stop waving your hands around when you talk! The auction is still going on!"

Putting the Art in Party...

The Preview Party for MassArt's annual benefit auction is one of the few places you get to see mega-millionaires mixing and mingling with starving artists and boho students, and this year was no exception.

Hosted by financial wonder twins Wes and Paul Karger (who threw a killer dinner party afterward at Stella), the preview attracted the likes of James Bond doppelgänger Matt Greer, the stunning Brelynn Spindel, funboy Mark Andrus, lensman Steve Edson, gallery owner Russell LaMontagne, white-hot painter Rachel Paxton and collector Sheryl Marshall.

The evening's most amusing exchange: "Nice to see you again," a man said.

"We've never met," responded the woman.

"Well," he said, "I'm a Buddhist."

Wouldn't Want to Do the Dishes...

Pulling off a dinner party for 750 guests requires a bit of logistical legerdemain, but Community Servings' Life Savor benefit always manages it somehow.

The evening began at the Langham Hotel, and then everyone broke up into groups of 10 or so to dine at hundreds of restaurants around town.

Present and accounted for were legal eagle Alan Dershowitz, the absurdly handsome Dana Ball and Philip Drapos, the dashing duo of Tony Corey and CJ Menard, latter-day Dashiell Hammett Robert B. Parker and the unstoppable Joan, retired anchor stud muffin Randy Price, metrosexual radio and TV personality Billy Costa, the criminally blue-eyed Rob Gravis, theater impresario Abe Rybeck and real estate mogul David Friedberg.

And They Partied Happily Ever After...

It's hard to imagine a sexier evening than the Sleeping Beauty Ball, a black-tie gala for Boston Ballet, held at the Park Plaza Castle.

The cavernous space was transformed into a fairy tale setting with a guest list that included just about everyone who's anyone in this town.

Among them: the ethereal Nina Fialkow and her handsome other half, David, fashion plate Patty Ribakoff and the ever affable Charles, silver fox Pamela Humphrey and her gorgeous daughters, Joanna and Victoria, the surpassingly gorgeous Andrea Osbon and tall drink of water John, professional party boy Billy Evers, international man of mystery Christian Bailey, sidelined ballet star John Lam, kooky travel magnate Andy Levine, the absurdly handsome Michael Poirier, male supermodel Randy Gross, trendsetter extraordinaire Lisa Pierpont, white-hot designer Sam Mendoza, fashionista Betty Riaz and the über-fun Ali, brunette beauty Julie Novakoff, and one woman who said, "Someone else is wearing the same dress as me. It's the junior prom all over again."

The partying lasted into the wee hours and raised over $700,000, but not before one guest said, "If they wanted to raise real money, they should have auctioned off 30 minutes with a ballet dancer with no repercussions from your wife." ✖✖✖

The Absolute Solution to Everything

On the first day, God drew up His blueprint for the world and everything in it. He sketched out the oceans and dinosaurs, the grains of sand on the beaches and the gradual ascent and debasement of man. But He thought the project lacked oomph, so He asked His angels for some constructive input.

After the usual train of duds—mammalian birth, zesty cheese flavoring, Perez Hilton—a minor seraphim named Lance raised his hand.

"I've got something I've been working on in my garage," he said. "It's called booze."

"What does it do?" asked God.

Lance fingered his goatee. "Well, it makes you fat, for one. And it gives you gas, so you sometimes burp in public. And once you start drinking it, it's really hard to quit."

God raised his eyebrows, but Lance went on. "It warps your emotions, causing you to behave, by turns, affectionate, slutty and maudlin. But that's all temporary, and it ends with painful dehydration and an offensive personal odor. Oh, and it rots your brain and liver."

"This is the stupidest idea I've heard all day!" cried God. "And Raphael over there came up with the platypus. What's the use of this 'booze' thing?"

Lance shrugged. "It makes all this," he said, tapping his finger on the blueprint of the universe, with its infinite disappointments and existential jests, "tolerable."

FACE CONTROL

IF YOU THINK IT'S hard standing in line outside the House of Blues on Saturday night, try being Trey Magnus, the guy manning the door. At 6' 4" and weighing 210 pounds, Magnus, 24, isn't easily intimidated. Yet, even though he's worked as a bouncer in Dallas and Orlando, he says he's never encountered patrons more ornery than here.

"Boston crowds are the roughest," Magnus says. He isn't sure if it's New England uptightness or simple Northeastern 'tude that makes Bostonians particularly resistant to the bum's rush. Either way, the drunks were more compliant in Florida and Texas. "Down South, it's a little different," he continues. "If I tell them to go jump off a bridge, they'll do it. Here, they'll ask 85 questions as to why. Very headstrong."

As a result, since the House of Blues opened in February, Magnus has been especially careful to adhere to the bouncer's rule of thumb. "We don't even touch anyone in the venue unless there is a physical altercation," he explains. "If it comes down to that, and we need to get someone out, we scoop 'em up by their arms. We never touch them from the shoulders up."

For especially intoxicated and combative Bostonians, Magnus follows the example of law enforcement. He calls for backup. "People think they're big and bad," he reasons. "But they're wasted. They think they're going to kick my ass, but there's an army of 50 security guys."

JOHN DYER

Drink of the Moment

Well-Tailored

A ruling principle in mixology is that a great many cocktails boil down to a simple formula, say spirit + fortified wine + bitters. So bourbon + sweet vermouth + bitters = a Manhattan. Mix proportions, add or switch in a variable, and you're really just dressing a few paper dolls in a myriad of options.

The Old Fashioned is usually an unaltered canvas. In the midst of our own vintage revival, here's a drink so antique its genesis stems from the classic cocktail movement of the Civil War era. "There were people looking for old-fashioned whiskey or rum drinks in the 1860s and 70s, and what they meant was a drink made as it was at the turn of the [nineteenth] century," explains Rendezvous barman Scott Holliday. "They didn't want any of those newfangled fizzes."

What they wanted was the formula of a sugar + water + bitters + spirit. What Holliday has designed is an Old Fashioned in a Nehru jacket. He begins by dousing sugar with Regan's bitters and sweet cardamom syrup. "Like we now associate the shaker sound with cocktails, they would associate them with this," he says, mashing the mix with his muddler. "I assume there was some Pavlovian response."

Added is saffron-infused gin, and the result is the canary yellow Nehru ($10), a cocktail with bright, imaginative ingredients that complement the frame. "The base spirit dominates," Holliday concurs. "It's the beauty of the drink and its versatility." This style made the Old Fashioned one of the first true cocktails; it makes the Nehru the drink of the moment. And it will undoubtedly be the formula for many natty offerings in the future.

Good Eats

Pearl in a Blanket

It's not the most obvious application for an Iggy's baguette. With over 300 cheeses just beyond the door at Formaggio Kitchen, Ihsan Gurdal could probably dream up umpteen ways to use the rustic loaf—none of which includes hollowing out the middle, charring the exterior and stuffing it with a half-pound Pearl hot dog. But as soon as grillmaster Eric dusts off the oversized Weber in April, Saturday lunches turn from the cheese counter to the sidewalk barbecue station. Get there early for the pulled lamb—word around the fire is that it's the first to go—but the jumbo link is an equally hot item.

ASK THE EXPERT

DICK DOHERTY OWNER OF DICK'S BEANTOWN COMEDY VAULT

Q: WHAT ADVICE WOULD YOU GIVE TODAY'S GRADUATING CLASS?

The first line of defense against future problems is a good education and the ability to show up for life 100 percent. However, there is one highly underrated skill that will sort out those who do well and those who excel: brown-nosing (apple-polishing, butt-kissing). One day, Greg Fitzsimmons and Joe Rogan (from Fear Factor) were in my office when Budd Friedman, owner of the Improv Comedy Club chain called, and I told him I had two of the great apple polishers in Boston coming out to Los Angeles. He told me to have them look him up because there are never enough brown-nosers in L.A. The rest is history. A person who has the skills necessary to remind his boss of how great he is at his job can rise quickly or even prevail. So pucker up.

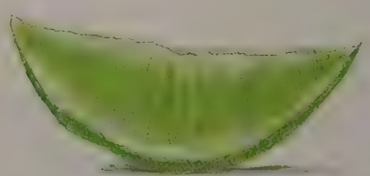
Going Out

OLD FAITHFUL

Crowded at 2:30 pm on a weekday, when even the busier places can expect a valley between bouts of activity, Tory Row is the product of a winning strategy.

Since 1991 and the opening of their Miracle of Science, restaurateurs Chris Lutes and Matthew Curtis have plugged into the recreational ethos of the city's young and hip, a sector that remains loyal to the duo's subsequent venues like the Middlesex Lounge and Audubon Circle.

At Tory Row, they appeal to that crowd with Shepard Fairey prints on the wall and with the space itself, which was blueprinted by Temple Simpson, a 2008 Harvard Graduate School of Design graduate. "Part of the reason we hired Temple was the connection to his generation and the collegiate environment," Curtis explains. "As my partner and I get older, we don't want to lose that. Now we understand how 40-year-olds think. We don't know how 20-year-olds think."



Tory Row is tethered to its target audience by having a 24-year-old manager and a 28-year-old chef, Matt Ralph, formerly of KO Prime. But with all these considerations for what's current, the restaurant feels familiar. The menu is tight and focused with some European influences—baked raclette ($9)—but offers mostly dressed-up American pub grub, like a cheeseburger ($10) in the Middlesex mold. Then there are the recognizable, minimalist design details that mark Tory Row as a descendent, a spore floated down Mass. Ave. from the Middlesex flagship.

"They're just materials," Curtis says, pointing to the wooden floor and the science lab tabletops with their welded steel legs. "We just do really down to earth stuff. We're not trying to be highfalutin. We do things with our own style and stick to it. It's not the trendiest thing, but it's durable." It's also enduring, popular now and sure to attract a crowd in the future.

ZINGER!

TO THE SKANK AT THE CELTICS PLAYOFF GAME: I'm the bartender you called a "bitch" because I berated you for sticking your skanky fingers in my freshly cut limes because you wanted one for your drink. My male partner was assisting you, and you were oh-too-important to break from your conversation with your friend to answer him when he asked you if you would like a lime.

Instead, you ignored him and continued to talk, then reached over behind the napkins—not once but twice—and stuck your skanky fingers into the container of limes with the same hand you just brushed through your dirty hair. I watched you. But it's all about you, isn't it? Why do you think we have covers and tongs for the fruit, honey? You idiot! But I was in the wrong for confronting you. I was the "bitch," as you so pleasantly said to me as you walked away. Real tough and lady-like, sweetheart. You also wished my partner "good luck" because I "had issues." Issues? Are cleanliness and safety from contamination "issues"? Where did you grow up? In a zoo?

We work hard to make sure everyone has a fun and pleasant experience, but because of your selfishness, I had to take myself away from other caring customers to go in the back to cut more fresh limes. I had to discard the container you exposed with your skankiness. If you weren't so self-absorbed, you would've heard the other customers complaining about you. They were the ones who called you a skank first. Have you seen the news this week? Can you say swine flu?

Your friendly, clean, health-conscious bartender

To the Welshman:

It's true that I can't point out where Wales is on a map. I blame that on poor social studies lessons in the seventh grade (sorry, Sister Jeanine). But when feathers ruffled between the two of us at the bar, the last thing I expected was the melodramatic gesture of you tossing a full drink in my face. It was very Desperate Housewives of you. We are in a recession here in the States! That drink is expensive and delicious! The least you could have done was tell me to open my mouth. You acted as a poor ambassador from the town... uh, country, no... the island of Wales! Plus you frightened all the cougars away from me. Poor form. I will gladly accept your apology now.

Soaked (in what appears to be a vodka cran)

To the band that decided to play Radiohead at O'Leary's last night:

You guys should know better than to sing "Fake Plastic Trees" to a bar full of drunk college kids. I love Radiohead but, "Fake Plastic Trees?" At least play "Creep." "Fake Plastic Trees" is probably the most depressing song ever, and you're playing it in a bar full of drunk college kids who are trying to drink away their sorrows?! Who does that? Think about your audience the next time you play. We might even listen to you then.

FROM ACROSS THE SEA, SISTERS

Harvard graduate Tania James writes about a family history set on two continents.

THE SILKY, sinuous prose of this book would be pleasure enough, its lyricism wafting across a story of loss and connection that stretches from India to America. But Tania James also wraps it around psychologically complex characters full of mystery and, at times, humor.

Linno and Anju are two Indian sisters whose mother has perished by drowning. Amid that desolation, a firecracker explodes in Linno's hand, resulting in its amputation. Nevertheless, she becomes a deft artist. Then Anju, sneakily claiming Linno's artwork as her own, wins a scholarship to a fancy school in New York, where she lives with the Solankis, an Indian family that introduces her to America. After all, Mrs. Solanki stars on a TV show that resembles The View. James wittily contrasts Mrs. Solanki's sleek, ambitious style with her sullen son, Rohit, who's trying to make an arty, over-the-top documentary about Anju. Meanwhile, Anju becomes attached to Bird, a woman who had a close emotional relationship with Anju's mother. A murky broth of dependency develops between these two.

Atlas of Unknowns
by Tania James
Two Indian sisters struggle to survive loss, betrayal and culture shock in James' novel.

In India, Linno fends off an arranged marriage with a blind man. The novel ends with Rohit's documentary following Anju, now fascinatingly evolved, back to her native country, where the two changed sisters find each other again. James' portrayals are gorgeous. ✖✖✖

Coolidge Corner is smelling damn good lately. On the same block as J.P. Licks and sharing space with flower shop KaBloom, Melt opened its ninth U.S. location this month. Not to be confused with the spa on Newbury, this all-natural body-product shop is stocked with bath bombs, shaving butters, solid lotions and scrubs, each coming in 10 scents that fall into three different categories: fresh, floral and fruity. In celebration of its opening, the store is holding "Meltopia" week through May 17, with events including a nutrition seminar, haircut/color consultation and a meet and greet with founder Steve McNally. Good luck stopping by Piccadilly Square's subterranean kosher bagel shop on a Friday morning. Not only will you be elbowing past all the other carb junkies, but you'll also be competing with a gaggle of Shabbat shoppers stocking up for Saturday morning's post-shul breakfast: first-rate fluffy challahs (poppy-seeded, raisin and plain); tubs of locally made whitefish salad; and cult-favorite crisp-chewy bagels like sunflower and potato spiced with black pepper. The from-scratch salt rings with halite-sized crystals are best schmeared with the house veggie cream cheese. The reward for all the jostling, though, is worth the oy-factor. FISHY BUSINESS

There's more than one way to stuff a taco.

IT'S ONE OF THE UPSIDES of a down economy: really talented chefs focusing on really tasty food with a really appealing pricepoint. Far more casual than either of his previous Jamaica Plain restaurants—Arbor and café D—chef Doug Organ's forthcoming Dorado Tacos & Cemitas near Coolidge Corner pays tribute to his San Diego–area childhood while keeping company with tastes that will be "built around the Pacific rim, as the menu evolves," he says.

On a roster of eight soft tacos, four fish varieties will include the fish taco fondly remembered from café D, the Ensenada, a grilled mahi-mahi taco, and the trademarked Fish Taco Asiático, panko-fried pollock with ginger and Napa cabbage salad, daikon, spicy dynamite crema and cilantro.

"We needed to push the issue; we didn't want to just do one" type of fish taco, says Organ, adding, "It's not really authentic Mexican. When I look at what can be stuffed in a taco—in Los Angeles, there are Korean BBQ taco carts—the world of the taco is a huge world." Organ's world includes tacos filled with portabellos, grilled chayote and queso fresco; house-made chorizo; and, of course, steak and chicken.

The menu also features cemitas, Mexican sandwiches on sesame seed rolls with fillings such as pork loin Milanesa, black beans, avocado, Oaxaca cheese and chipotles en adobo. Sides include yucca fries dusted with smoked ancho chile and the iconic Mexican street food snack called elote, a grilled ear of corn spread with mayonnaise, guajillo chile, lime and cotija cheese. Organ expects his restaurant to be open daily by mid-June at 401 Harvard St.

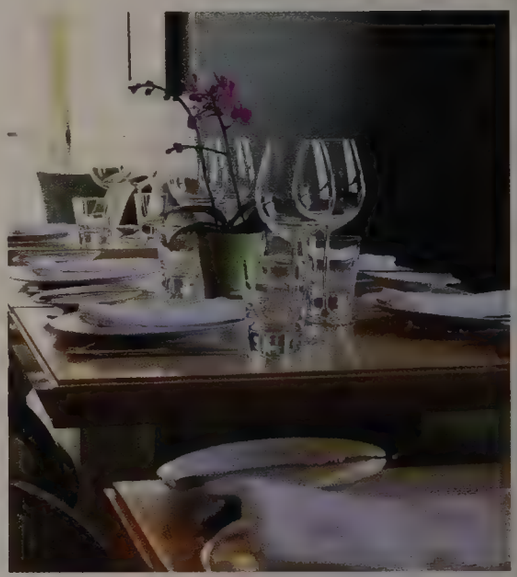
SENSING AND SENSIBILITY



French fusion at its best at the Fairmont Battery Wharf Hotel

I ARRIVED HOME FROM FRANCE after a recent trip a little apprehensive. After 11 days of eating and drinking with reckless abandon, I feared the reckoning of my bathroom scale. Remarkably, despite two full-course meals a day preceded by croissants and café au lait in the morning, my weight was precisely the same upon my return as when I left. How could that be?

Good eating is the enemy of overeating, and good eating is the norm in France. Unlike the gargantuan portions encountered in America, French meals are usually planned and executed with restraint, featuring quality over quantity, stressing fresh vegetables and seeking to satisfy with flavor and texture rather than to overwhelm. And while the French are enthusiastic diners, they are not promiscuous snackers. Eating is confined to meal time rather than incessant, mindless noshing in between.

My French trip reminded me of recent visits to Sensing, Boston's newest French dining venue at the Fairmont Battery Wharf Hotel. It's inspired and guided by Guy Martin, the celebrated Michelin-starred owner/chef of Le Grand Véfour in Paris, where three years ago he opened the first Sensing. The kitchen at Boston's Sensing, in the capable hands of chef Gérard Barbin, promises the polish of Paris, but also local ingredients and an infusion of Asian flair. For the most part, it succeeds.

The Fairmont's handsome lobby leads to an L-shaped bar that looks into the open kitchen. The dining room features clean, modern lines, its large windows dressed with formal green-gray draperies and sheer liners, large quadrilateral columns, and a recessed ceiling with indirect lighting. Stainless-steel wine buckets on pedestals stand alongside well-spaced tables with upholstered armchairs and banquettes.

Sweet butter accompanied a basket of breads, while a limited but well-chosen wine list yielded surprisingly varied choices. A glass of 2008 Three Brooms sauvignon blanc ($10) boasted crisp, fresh flavor and pleasant acidity, demonstrating why New Zealand's Marlborough region has given France's Loire Valley a run for its money. A first-rate Tuscan red, 2006 Querciabella sangiovese ($13 a glass) was rich, full-bodied and aromatic. With sparkling wine, Sensing featured Taittinger Brut, whose tiny bubbles, distinctive flavor and marvelous bouquet showed why the Champagnoise fight so passionately to protect their proprietary appellation from imitators.

Sensing's signature appetizer, a "snacking plate" of six small bites ($16), arranged on a circular platter as if on a clock face at 10 minute intervals, changes its components from time to time. The waiter advised they were best eaten in clockwise order. On our first visit, they consisted of a local raw oyster on the half shell with a "granity" of shallots and vinegar (terrific, but I could have devoured another 10 of them); king crab meat in jelly, which wasn't so memorable; a creamy and savory duck foie crème brûlée; a forgettable smoked mussel/beet tartar; a cheese and sage maki sushi that sounded grim but tasted delicious; and Jerusalem artichoke soup with North African spices, which was pure ambrosia. You can order six of one of these items, or three each of two, or two each of three. My wife ordered an exquisite baby leaf salad ($10), augmented with shaved vegetables and garden herbs—blanched fennel and slices of beets and carrots, their muted sweetness deftly contrasting with a well-constructed vinaigrette. The foie gras ($18) would have been better without the bizarre topping of crumbled popcorn, designed apparently to provide a crunch contrast to the velvety liver. On the other hand, the tangerine reduction and stewed rhubarb compote with a touch of cumin were a formidable garnish, with their exotic and sweet-tart accents providing a perfect foil for the dish's richness.

Of the main courses, the five seared sea scallops ($24) were big, sweet-tasting beauties garnished with crunchy slices of apple and celery that contrasted with the satiny shellfish. Only a foam, a fad whose time I thought and hoped had come and gone, detracted. For beef eaters, the prime beef strip loin ($32) was a large slab of rare steak, reasonably tender while satisfyingly resilient, with robust flavor. Small, creamy chickpea fries made a delightful accompaniment.

Finally, the cod steamed in lemongrass, black rice and vegetables with coconut and grapefruit sauce may have been the best fish dish I have ever eaten. Its fusion elements added nuanced flavors to the firm fish and al dente baby vegetables.

Desserts included a decent cheesecake, moist and mellow, with tangy strawberry sorbet ($10) and a spectacular confection called "lemon and yuzu crystalline" ($10). This was lemony custard, sorbet and a crispy cookie in a stemless brandy snifter topped by a geodesic dome of finely spun citrus hard candy that shattered with one whack of a spoon. What an imaginative way to conclude an enjoyable repast. ***

PATRIOT GAMES

The Boston Marathon is an incredible feat of stamina. And I'll bet it's tough for the runners, too.

THERE ARE MANY THINGS IN life that are better in theory than in practice: Riding in convertibles on the highway. Battery-powered vacuum cleaners. Clowns. And now, I can add to that list: Going to the Red Sox game on Marathon Monday.

Patriots Day, aka Marathon Monday, is a bizarre holiday. I'm all in favor of random days off, but Patriots' Day is a little awkward if you get a phone call from someone in another state who wants to talk business. My policy is: Don't answer the phone after 10 am. That way, you can avoid explaining to a Midwesterner that you're slurring your words at noon on a Monday because you live in a banana republic that declares a one-day Mardi Gras each April to celebrate the running prowess of Kenyans. Not that I'm complaining. If I were governor, I'd invent at least a couple of new state holidays for each month, all of which would be observed in August.

However, as much as I enjoy a gratuitous day off, I have a bit of advice for next year: Don't go to the Red Sox game. In fact, if you can possibly help it, celebrate Patriots' Day from somewhere a bit further removed from the epicenter of the madness. Like New Zealand.

I figured that once I got out of the T at Kenmore Square, the miserable crush of humanity would disperse a bit. And it did momentarily, only to recombine in the form of lines everywhere. There was a line to get into Pizzeria Uno, I tell you. I saw it with my own eyes.

Fenway, of course, is always sold out, but on Marathon Monday it was extra sold out. Trying to get a beer was reminiscent of the scene in I Am Legend where the helicopters are evacuating Manhattan and zombies are eating everyone. Except, instead of helicopters, people were trying to gain access to Bud Lights, and instead of zombies, there were belligerent fat guys wearing Tom Brunansky jerseys. After waiting fruitlessly for 20 minutes in the beer line, I gave up and drank my own urine like Bear Grylls. Which helped me avoid two lines, actually.

Then the game was over and it was time to go watch the marathon, which meant jostling with thousands of people in order to see some joggers run past. That's it. I could understand the appeal if the runners were all naked and allowed to carry a Taser that they could use on a competitor once per race. In fact, given a giant treadmill and access to the Comcast Center, I think I might've just invented a great summer spectator sport.

Fenway: The beer line of the damned

But attending a marathon in person is as dumb as going to the Daytona 500 expressly to watch lap 134. The whole challenge of the sport consists of the endurance required by a 26.2-mile run, and you're seeing maybe a hundred yards of that if you're lucky. Even if you catch the elite runners going past, it's not like they're doing anything unbelievable. They're running briskly and possibly crapping themselves. Big deal. I could do that. Not for 26 miles, sure. But it's not like witnessing an athletic feat that you couldn't do at all, like throwing a 95-mile-per-hour fastball or dancing with Julianne Hough without getting aroused.

So we quickly abandoned Boylston Street in search of a watering hole. Which meant more crowds and more lines, because every bar within a mile of Copley was crammed with smelly people limping around wearing short-shorts and tin-foil blankets. Sure, it's a kinky scene, but there are drawbacks, too. I was at Jurys, and runners kept giving me the hairy eyeball because I was sitting on a nice comfy stool and watching them hobble around looking for a place to sit. Hey, if you wanted to get here in time to grab a seat, you should've run faster, grandpa! You're not entitled to my spot. You're a superhuman marathon person who can run 26.2 miles, so don't act like I'm hoarding my seat from a pregnant woman standing in front of me on the T. That happened hours ago, and now it's time to move on.

At the end of the day, you've spent most of your time waiting in line—for drinks, food, seats, trains, ATMs and a chance to glimpse skinny people grimacing. In the future, I will tolerate all of that only for an event that is actually fun, like a Harpoon Fest or a Poison/Def Leppard double bill. The latter of which, incidentally, is happening next month in Mansfield. I don't know if they've got an opening act yet, but I've got this great idea for a giant treadmill and Tasers. ✖✖✖

UPSIDE, DOWNTURN

Tough times call for growing up. Don't be a Spicoli.

THIS IS A SERIOUS COLUMN. It's time to get outside of narrow pursuits and look to the future. I believe that it's crucial to understand the past, but not become immersed in it, which is why I keep refusing the endless requests from friends and acquaintances to join their Facebook entreaties. One of my all-time favorite book titles has been Is There Life After High School? For many Facebookers, the answer is a resounding "no." If you throw in grammar school or summer camp or Montessori friends who were allowed by their parents to put on all of their clothes inside-out because "We don't want to interfere with their innate sense of self," then it adds endless people you can do without gladly. Do we really want to hear from them? Or see snapshots of them in their former or present states? Perhaps the economic climate is giving more spare time to our population of over 300 million citizens. We are in a Darwinian society: survival of the fittest. Do you want to be the ant or the grasshopper? Work and save and plan? Or lose yourself in cyber time-wasting?

If you're in your 20s or 30s, this is a lucky moment for you. Because, if you've lost your job or are worried about losing it, you'll never forget this difficult period. Times will get better; this vicious cycle will turn. People will go back to stores and restaurants and hotels. But this has been the first economic and stock market bump I've witnessed in my life that has affected virtually every household in America. Everyone I know is thinking about everything they spend and everything they do. American society has been transformed in just a few months, unprecedented in any period since the start of World War II (about which most of this audience has no knowledge, except from history books or movies). So why is this a lucky period for everyone from ages 18 to 40? Because bad times teach better lessons than greedy times. Young people now will realize that real estate, stocks and collectibles like art can go down hard and that all of life is a series of cycles, good and bad. You'll never forget the lessons learned today. It's also a wonderful period for following dreams, being entrepreneurial, reacting to conditions around you by taking a chance on switching careers, buying a condo or first home, believing in yourself. It's a period to make time for yourself, not waste it going back to Fast Times at Ridgemont High, or wherever you went.

In this unprecedented climate, I've been reaching out to my clients and friends who are long retired, the only people I know who lived through the Great Depression. I've asked them what they remember about it, and if they were aware as children of what was going on around them. "Of course, I was aware," my friend Bob, who's in his 80s, said. "I was a freshman in high school and my father lost everything in the stock market. We moved from upstate New York to Florida when it was all mangrove swamps and get-rich-quick schemes in real estate. Then the family bounced around for years. And I swore that when I grew up, above all, my family would have security."

A client, also in his 80s, told me, "We lived in Dorchester in the 1930s. My brother and I had chores. We had to clean the basement, take out the trash barrels and mow the lawn. We were given a dollar a week apiece for the work. One day our father said, 'You're off lawn duties from now on, boys. Your uncle is going through hard times and he's taking over those jobs.' We complained a little about the loss of our income, and Dad told us, 'You're lucky I have a business that feeds us. Remember always: You have to take care of family.'"

My client added, "Every time I think of the Depression, I see my uncle mowing grass, lugging out the barrels. It made me sad then; it still makes me sad."

Another big reason to celebrate being young is money. Most of you have 401(k) plans or other self-directed retirement programs. I've suggested in the past that you keep your investment selections simple: blue-chip, large-cap American companies and a portion in international funds with emphasis on long-term growth. Since you can afford a more stretched-out time frame than retirees, consider an aggressive option for yourselves. Invest some of the 401(k) funds in a small cap or particularly a "low price" stock fund if that choice is offered. In my opinion, over the next three to five years, there are literally hundreds of stocks selling in single digits that used to be much higher a year ago. This is an area where you can get a much bigger bang for your buck when markets recover. I used to say that for the public, "Happiness is 1,000 shares of a three-dollar stock." I feel this for myself as well, particularly in this fearful period. Eventually, fear will turn again, albeit slowly, to greed. This is a time for taking a deep breath, sucking it up and daring to be in there. And it's a time to face yourself and your future. Not your past. ✖✖✖

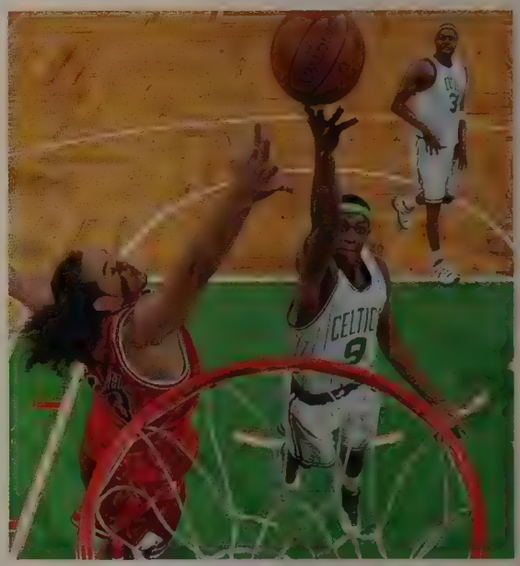
The School of Sports { RICH LEVINE }

ON RONDO, REMY, JOBA AND THE HOT PLATE

1 ONE TINY SOURCE OF REDEMPTION

If there's any one out there still upset over last year's MVP voting, take some solace in Kevin Garnett's questionable appointment to the 2009 All-Defensive Team. That's got to be a make-up call, right? Although in KG's defense, he hasn't allowed a basket in more than a month.

5 HOT STORYLINES



Sox Sweep the Yanks! (Again!) And the weirdest subplot is that Joba Chamberlain seems to be the only pinstriper who cares. Fatty J's on the fast track to becoming one of the biggest Yankee villains of all time. (Although we must say, his mother was nothing but helpful last month when our meth dealer was on vacation.)

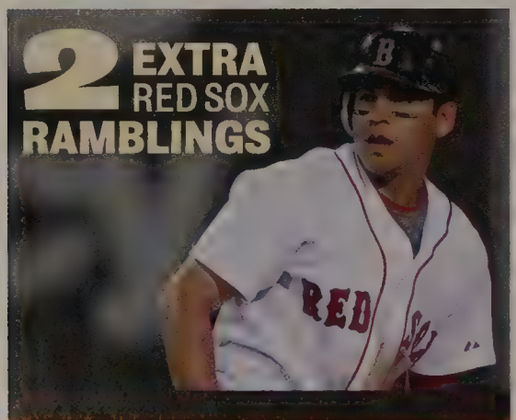
Pats Catch the Twitter Bug @realpatriots keep doin ur thing BB and don't worry bout them h8ers! LOL!! Gr8 job w those draft pix 2. U promise Patrick Chung will be better than Eugene?! LMFAO!!! B-)

What Was That Guy's Name? It's impossible to speak poorly about Jason Bay right now. Without him, the Sox would be... well, probably just happy the B's and C's were still around to steal headlines. But even so, let's quit pretending that Bay "made us forget about Manny." That statement will only be true once everyone stops feeling the need to say it (again and again).

Round 2, Fight! After their first round sweep, and consequent Game 1 rout of the Hurricanes, we weren't sure if the Bruins would ever lose again. But alas, these are the playoffs, and Carolina sure as hell isn't Montreal. It's a brand new game, so it's time to take everything we thought we knew after that Canadiens series and toss it out the window. Everything except: "Don't date within the division."

Pop for Papi We pray to the god of Phil Plantier that, by now, David Ortiz has hit his first home run. Either way, we have to ask: How long before the Sox start shopping for another DH? Let's not call him Papi's replacement—too early for that—but maybe "a midseason insurance policy in the event that Ortiz still has fewer homers than Jonathan Van Every." Yeah, that works.

4 On Boston vs. Orlando



The Triple-Double Dunk Win or lose, the lasting image of this series will be Rajon Rondo's one-step-in-front-of-the-foul-line, triple-double-sealing dunk. It's one that Celtics fans will be seeing for the rest of their lives. "Hey, Doc. It's us again. Listen, turns out we're not gonna need a refill on that Cialis after all. Nope... doin' just fine over here."

Surprise of the Series? Getting to cross "Watch JJ Redick get thrown out of an NBA Playoff game for swearing at an official" off of our bucket list. Oh, JJ, you're just so tough, aren't you? (cough) Douchebag! (cough)

Name That House It's official, Eddie House needs a nickname, and an amazing one at that. Can we call him Microwave Jr.? Nah, not quite. OK, how about the Hot Plate? Actually, that's pretty good. Now you don't go messing with the Hot Plate, Rafer Alston, because you'll always get burned!

That's the Truth Is Paul Pierce the NBA's version of Rodney Dangerfield? How does a superstar EVER get called for four fouls in nine minutes of playoff action? Of course, some of that falls on Paul—he's hardly been the model of aggression and consistency—but damn, with the way he's been treated, you'd think the NBA had an officiating problem or something.

2 EXTRA RED SOX RAMBLINGS

You Down With OBP? His steal of home will go down as the most exciting play of 2009—honestly, how do you top that?—but it's time for Jacoby Ellsbury to start producing on a more tangible level. Sure, the runs are OK, and his average is up, but the .323 OBP needs to improve. Unless, of course, he doesn't mind hitting behind Nick Green and Jason Varitek.

Dawg's Fight Nothing against Dennis Eckersley, but the Red Sox color commentary chair belongs to one mustache, and one mustache only—Jerry Remy's. Here's to a quick and full recovery, RemDawg.

3 RIDICULOUS QUESTIONS

Dash for Dough You're walking with Jacoby Ellsbury, Rajon Rondo and Randy Moss when you randomly scream, "$1 million to the first guy who can run down to that tree and back!" It's about 50 yards away. Who's $1 million richer? Assume Moss is running under the premise that he'll be paid in straight cash. (Also, assume he's not stoned.)

Qualified Coaches You're the CEO of a big-time meatpacking plant and your foreman just quit. You post an ad online, and four candidates come in for an interview: Bill Belichick, Terry Francona, Claude Julien and Doc Rivers. So, who gets the job? (OK, fine. So what if Belichick turned you down?)

Drumstick Jungle It's Thanksgiving and there's one drumstick left on the platter. Only problem is, neither Kendrick Perkins nor Richard Seymour has had anything to eat... in three days. Who wins the battle for the drumstick? And, how many Japanese cities are toppled in the process?

Soroff On EDDIE DOYLE

The retired Bull & Finch Pub barman on Cheers, tipping and what a wine spritzer says about a customer.

LEGENDARY BOSTON BARTENDER EDDIE DOYLE was born in Brighton. After graduating from Boston English High School, he matriculated at Northeastern University but left to take a job with the state. At night, he studied graphic design at the School of the Museum of Fine Arts and the Art Institute of Boston, eventually designing ads for Sears and other stores. In the late 1960s, he began moonlighting as a bartender, joining the Bull & Finch Pub in the early 1970s. Doyle became the inspiration for the characters of Sam Malone and Coach on Cheers. He also established Cheers for Children, which has raised over $1 million for charity, and the Boston Barleyhoppers, a running/drinking club with the motto, "We run for fun and roam for foam." After 35 years, he retired in March and will begin working on a book about his experiences. He lives in Westwood.

Jonathan Soroff: Finish this joke: "A guy walks into a bar _____"
Eddie Doyle: In my case, it'd be, "A guy walks into a bar and he never leaves."

Did you watch Cheers faithfully?
No. Now I watch the reruns because I missed a lot of them.

When the whole Cheers thing exploded, how did it change your life?
I was able to pay some of my bills. It really exploded about the second season of the show. I happened to be working four straight shifts, and we got caught with our pants down. All of a sudden, we had over a thousand people a day coming in, and it just got busier. Three thousand people a day and, on the weekend, five. I'd lose weight just on a bar shift.

Did you remember everybody's name?
It's tough. Repeat customers, you get to know them, and then there are the people whose drink you remember. You're like, "Oh, there's Double Vodka Tonic." But we had very few regulars, because there were so many tourists.

Thing from your years you're most proud of?
Well, I met my wife there. I'm proud of Cheers for Children and raising all that money. Also Cheers for Kids, my luncheon series. We served hotdogs to more than 3,000 Boston school kids from some of the tougher neighborhoods. And another thing I'm proud of: In all the years I worked there, I never had a fight at my bar.

Best way to deal with a drunk?
Be discreet. Without embarrassing the person, you lean over and say, "I don't feel confident serving you another drink, so that one will be your last." They usually thank you, get up and leave. I've had it backfire on me, but I let the doorman take care of that.

One thing that makes a really great bar?
The ambience. A place that's not plastic. The old Eliot Lounge. That was a real sports bar. But I guess anyplace that makes you want to go back to it.

One thing that makes a great bartender?
Being able to connect with people. Anyone can stand there and open beer bottles and mix drinks, but it's communicating with the customer that counts. Not only does it make the day go by faster, but it's great in the tip cup, too.

One person you would've liked to serve a drink?
George W. Bush. I'd show him my appreciation for dozing off while my retirement fund went into the dumper. If he sat at my bar, I'd serve him a flat 10-ounce beer in a 20-ounce glass.

Best tip you ever got?
A hundred bucks, a couple of times. One was $300. But those, unfortunately, were few and far between. There was one guy, a salesman, who used to come in. Very dapper. He'd run up a good bar tab and didn't have cash to pay it, so I dragged out the credit card thing. He fills it out and leaves, and when I looked at it later, beside the word "Tip," he wrote, "Thanks!"

What's your drink of choice?
I like chardonnay. In the summer, beer. I like Heineken in a bottle and Bass on tap.

Favorite bar snack?
Norm's Nuts. They sell them at the Bull & Finch. Don't buy 'em. They're just cocktail peanuts and the ones from Building #19 are better.

One drink you hated making?
Anything in a blender.

I'll name a few drinks. You tell me what they say about the person ordering them. Whiskey neat?
Maybe a drinking problem.

Wine spritzer?
Very cautious. Not a drinker.

Vodka rocks.
An extra-dry martini on the rocks? Good conversationalist.

Best bar trick you ever saw?
Bar trick? Well, I only saw her once, but I got her the hell outta there. [Laughs.]

Worst trick you ever played on a patron?
Oh, God. There was this one girl who couldn't decide what kind of frozen drink to have, and I was busy. She started getting on my nerves, so I said, "I'll make you a special one." I came back and gave her a drink. She loved it. It was a Tuna Colada. I did that one a couple of times.

Is there a joke you always used at the bar?
Yeah. I loved to repeat it to the same people over and over. A cheeseburger walks into a bar. The bartender says, "Sorry. We don't serve food."

Was the bar really like a sitcom?
Yeah. We had a couple come in, middle-aged, very casual. Guy leans over and says, "My girlfriend and I go to all these different places, and I always take her picture topless. Can I do it here?" I said, "Are you kidding me? There are too many people in here." He said, "C'mon, we do it everywhere." I said, "Let me ask the manager." So I walk down to the end of the bar and ask him, and he said, "I think if you turn around, you'll see they're already doing it."

Last question: Ever tempted to steal one of those mooseheads?

Boston's Beloved Bartenders 2009

By Jonathan Soroff
Photographs By Kim Kennedy

The great American drama critic George Jean Nathan once said, "I drink to make other people more interesting." This is hardly necessary if you're keeping company with truly great bartenders. Sure, they facilitate the act of imbibing, but they're guaranteed to be interesting people in their own right, even without the help of a half dozen Dark and Stormies. Professionalism counts, especially in such a serious business as tying one on.

That, of course, is the point of this issue, in which we laud the city's greatest drink-slingers. Each of them has different strengths. Some can toss bottles around like Tom Cruise in Cocktail. Some are formal and old-school. And some act as de facto psychiatrists, dispensing advice and counsel but never, ever repeating a word of what you've said in your inebriated state. All of them share one salient characteristic: They're charismatic individuals who lure in the customers like moths to a shiny, boozy light.

So how (short of going out every night and getting blotto) do we assemble our roster of all-stars? Well, (in addition to going out every night and getting blotto) we publish a ballot in the magazine for readers to nominate their favorites. Then we tally the votes, throw in our own two cents and compile the list, trying to mix geography, types of bars and styles of bartending. We also include a signature drink recipe from each bartender, hoping you'll keep this issue around as a bar guide and perhaps attempting some of their mixology magic at home.

So here, then, is The Improper Bostonian's Beloved Bartenders, Class of 2009. Bottoms up!

Chris Whitney

Bond Restaurant and Lounge, the Langham Hotel, 250 Franklin St., Boston (617-956-8765) bondboston.com

Born and Distilled In:
Newburyport

By Day: I've been a bartender for almost 10 years, but simultaneously I've been acting and modeling.

Describe Your Style: I like to throw bottles around once in a while when we're having a really great night. I try to be fast and still talk to my regulars.

Describe Where You Work: Bond is a restaurant/lounge that caters to the financial district during the week. After 10 pm, we have a great DJ who really changes the atmosphere from Happy Hour suits to a younger nightclub crowd.

Describe Your Regulars: 85 percent cougars.

Why Do You Think They Return? Because they're cougars.

Your Trademark: I do a lot of singing behind the bar, and I try to get the crowd to join in.

How Would Your Regulars Describe You: I have a pretty distinct scar on my right cheek that people usually remember.

Most Interesting or Odd Patron Encounter: I was bartending in Portland, and I served a woman who turned out to be a big-time agent. It led to me landing a role as Ryan Reynold's double in The Proposal. It comes out in June. Yes, I'm plugging the movie.

Favorite Bar for Your Nights Off: The Playwright in Southie.

Least Favorite Drink to Make: Virgin frozen cocktails or anything you see on a TGIF drink menu.

Worst Trick You Ever Played on a Patron: I made a person I kinda didn't like fake drinks and watched them pretend to get drunk.

Favorite Bar Trick: Lighting the bar on fire with black sambuca.

Best Tip You Ever Received: Someone once told me to never marry a girl that you meet at a bar, then he handed me 200 bucks for listening to his story.

Worst Way to Get Your Attention at the Bar: Say my last name or slam your hands on the bar. For everyone who does that and thinks it's OK, bartenders hate it.

Personal Policy on Dating Customers: I plead the Fifth.

Hangover Cure: Abe & Louie's Bloody Mary.

Drink of Choice: Maker's Mark Manhattan on the rocks, a little sweet. Also, the Champagne of beers: Miller Highlife.

Signature Drink: The Singabera Martini
2 oz. Bombay Sapphire Gin, 1½ oz. Domaine de Canton, ½ oz. St-Germaine, Japanese green tea, agave simple syrup and fresh-squeezed lemon juice. Shake on ice and serve up, garnished with crystallized ginger. (This drink won the People's Choice award at the Domaine de Canton bartending competition.)

Bottled and Distilled in: Seoul, Korea, but raised in upstate N.Y.

By Day: I once worked as a preschool teacher and plan to go back to school for nursing.

Your Trademark: Beauty with a brain and a personality to match.

Best Way to Handle a Drunk: Get a manager.

Favorite Bar for Your Nights Off: The Ivy.

Least Favorite Drink to Make: Mojito.

Favorite Bar Trick: You'll have to come in and see it. It involves props.

Best Tip You Ever Received: $1,000 on New Year's Eve.

Best Way to Get Your Attention at the Bar: Have an empty glass and call my name.

Personal Policy on Dating Customers: I don't date customers. It's bad for business.

Hangover Cure: Sleep and lots of water.

Drink of Choice: Cosmo.

Signature Drink
Mother of Pearl
2 oz. lemongrass-infused vodka, 2 oz. sake and 2 oz. of lychee juice. Mix in a shaker and pour into a Riesling glass with a whole lychee as garnish.

By Day: My passion has been singing, ever since I was a young child. And lately I've had the opportunity to pursue it.

Describe Your Style: I'm very energetic behind the bar, always trying to entertain: dancing, singing, flipping bottles. Anything to put on a good show!

Describe Where You Work: Dance clubs: music pumping, bodies sweating. It's a very fast-paced, high-energy atmosphere.

How Would Your Regulars Describe You: A lot of people tell me I look like Dean Cain or Mario Lopez.

Most Interesting or Odd Patron Encounter: I work in bachelorette-party central, and they have some of the craziest, funniest gear with them: penis-shaped straws and necklaces... 'nuff said.

Least Favorite Drink to Make: Anything with milk. It makes a mess of the shakers and brings back bad memories of the time I got sick from drinking a milk-based cocktail.

Worst Trick You Ever Played on a Patron: One thing I might do if they're drunk is fill a shot glass with water, tell them it's vodka and that it's on the house. They usually can't even tell.

Favorite Joke: Can I get a Sex on the Beach? Yeah, but I think my place is closer. They usually get a kick out of it, depending on how fun they are.

Best Way to Get Your Attention at the Bar: I'm always scanning the bar for people who need a drink. If you're patiently waiting, I'm going to help you before I help the guy who's yelling and waving his arms around.

Hangover Cure: Water and Gatorade. And lots of it.

Drink of Choice: Mixed drink: Suffering Bastard. Beer: Dogfish Head 120 Minute IPA.

Signature Drink:
Sour Patch Kid
Equal parts berry, cherry, citron, grape, orange, raspberry and vanilla vodka. Add a splash of sour mix, cranberry juice and Sprite. Shake well. Pour as a shot or over ice.

Bottled and Distilled In:
Buffalo, N.Y.

By Day: I'm the marketing director for Healthworks Fitness Centers for Women, but I partly owe my career to bartending. I met the president of Healthworks while working at Teatro, went on to intern for the company while in grad school and landed my position with them last July. The skill sets are strangely similar. Healthworks is such a fast-paced environment that multitasking and the ability to work quickly help me do my job everyday.

Describe Your Style: Friendly and upbeat. I'm also organized, fast and empathetic—skills every good bartender should have. I also never forget a face, so if I've served you before, I'll take the time to see how everything is going.

Describe Your Regulars: Diverse. Emerson students, movie-goers looking to get a quick bite or drink before the show, business executives, area residents from the Ritz and along the Common, and the club crowd before they head to the Alley or Felt.

Why Do You Think They Return? I consider and treat them like friends. We know what's going on in each other's lives on a personal level. I can have a drink on the other side of the bar with them, too.

Your Trademark: My ever-changing hairstyle and color. My sister is the best colorist in Boston. She's made me black and blue, brown, blondish, copper, bright red. I've been curly, straight, pinned back, pulled up—I frequently get, "Oh, you have different hair again!"

Most Interesting or Odd Patron Encounter: A year ago, a couple came in and ordered Tanqueray and tonics. I had a nagging feeling that I'd served them before, but not at Teatro. I eventually put it together that I'd served them more than four years ago at the resort where I worked on Fort Lauderdale beach. They'd been on vacation and had told me they were from Massachusetts and, ironically enough, while serving them in Fort Lauderdale, I told them how I was planning to move to Boston. Small world. And I told you I never forget a face.

Favorite Bar for Your Nights Off: Masa—Banderitas are the most amazing thing ever.

Least Favorite Drink to Make: Cosmos, hands down. The first Saturday Sex and the City played at the Loews, I made 63. I know the exact number because we had a contest to see who could sell the most. I won without trying.

Worst Trick You Ever Played on a Patron: This guy was relentlessly begging me to give him a pineapple to eat out of the Stoli Doli [jar]. As anyone who has ever been curious to try one knows (myself included), the vodka absorbs all of the sugar and juice, so the pineapple essentially tastes like a vodka sponge. I assured him that he didn't want it, but he wouldn't stop pressing me and I think he wanted to impress his friends. So I said, "OK, but you have to eat the whole thing." He agreed, and I gave him a huge chunk. He finished the whole thing while cringing at every bite.

Favorite Bar Joke: I have Polish heritage, so I really like ones like: "Knock, knock." "Who's there?" "Polish burglar!" They crack me up, but no one else laughs.

Best Tip You Ever Received: Anything over 20 percent is great, but Red Sox tickets are even better.

Best Way to Get Your Attention at the Bar: Do anything but wave or stare at me. Be polite, smile and please have the courtesy to ask, "How are you doing?" back.

Hangover Cure: If it's the weekend, keep drinking. If not, potato chips and Red Bull.

Signature Drink:
Lavender Lemonade
Shake 2 oz. of Christiania Vodka with 2 oz. house-made lavender lemonade. Strain over ice into a pilsner glass. Top with lemon-lime soda and garnish with fresh lavender and a wedge of lemon.

By Day: I also do guided fishing excursions.

Describe Your Style: One word: speed.

Describe Your Regulars: Diverse and very appreciated.

How Would Your Regulars Describe You: "Oh, you mean the tall guy."

Most Interesting or Odd Patron Encounter: To protect the innocent, I must decline comment.

Best Way to Handle a Drunk: Shut them off.

Favorite Bar for Your Nights Off: I never go to bars.

Least Favorite Drink to Make: Mojito.

Worst Trick You Ever Played on a Patron: I would never trick somebody who's tipping me.

Favorite Bar Joke: A grasshopper walks into a bar. The bartender says, "Hey, we have a drink named after you." The grasshopper replies, "You've got a drink named Steve?"

Best Tip You Ever Received: $500

Best Way to Get Your Attention at the Bar: Be patient. We see you.

Hangover Cure: Sleep it off.

Drink of Choice: Macallan 18

Signature Drink:
The Big Crush
3 oz. Stoli Razberi, ½ oz. Chambord, ½ oz. Cointreau, a splash of fresh lime juice. Combine and shake on ice, strain into a martini glass and garnish with fresh berries and sparkling wine.

Bottled and Distilled In:
"The Shire, Middle Earth"

By Day: I'm a bartender/actress. I've done a lot of theater, film and background work around Boston and Providence. This summer, I'll be working on Amanda Palmer's new horror/comedy movie.

Describe Your Style: I'm a mix between the clown and the psychiatrist. I can get pretty silly behind the bar and dish it out as well as take it. I don't think a great time can be had if you take yourself too seriously. I also really try to listen and connect with my regulars. Empathizing with people not only makes me feel good but it translates into acting. Acting is revealing true human nature, and when I'm bartending, I have a front row seat.

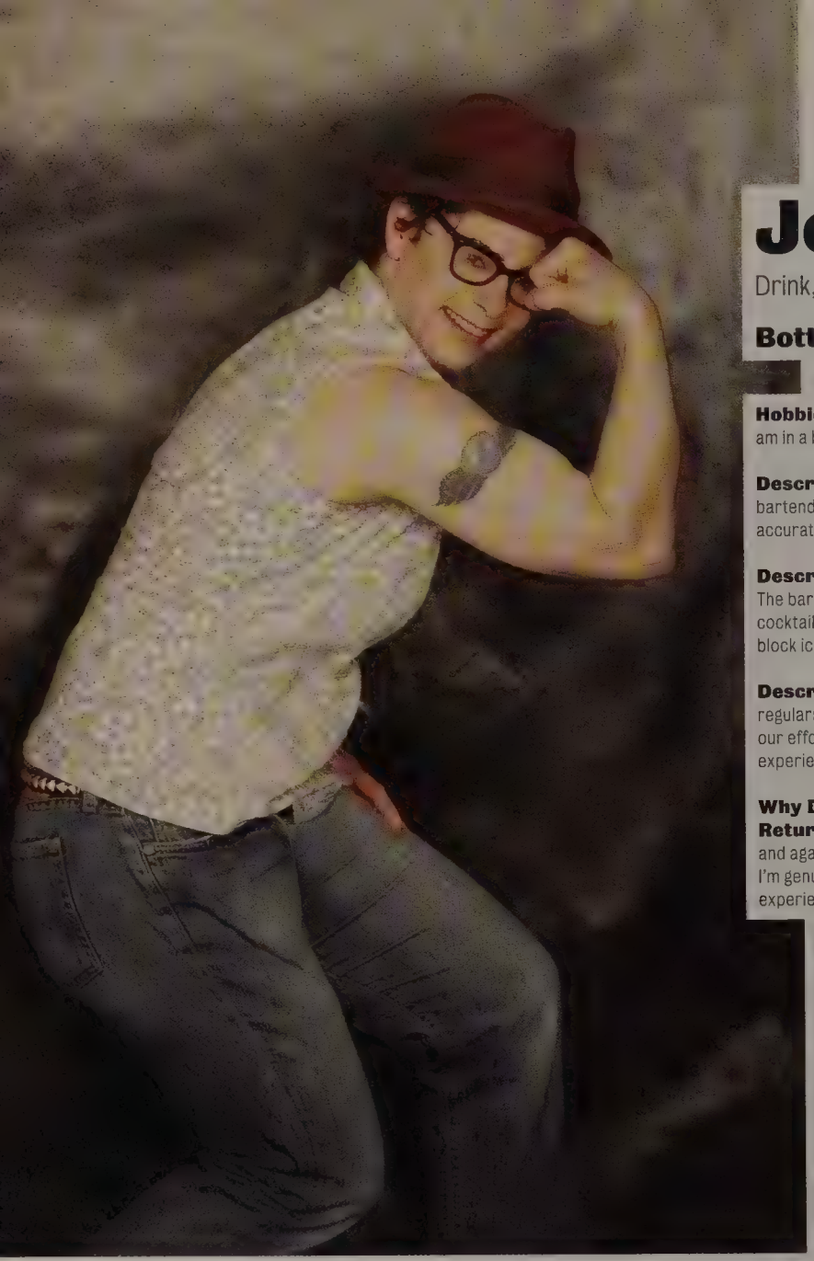
Describe Where You Work: An authentic Spanish restaurant with amazing food, great drinks and sangria on tap. There's an upbeat, jovial attitude because the staff and clientele are genuinely happy to be there.

How Would Your Regulars Describe You: The short, loud brunette with the big eyes.

Most Interesting or Odd Patron Encounter: I've served plenty of military veterans, but this particular night, a group gathered at the bar to surprise a buddy with a homecoming party. Great people, great laughs. The guest of honor finally shows up, and I line up shots for all of them. As our patriot shrugs off his coat, I realize that one of his arms is broken and the other in a sling. How's he going to do a shot with no arms? So I came out from behind the bar and told them all to raise their glasses. I poured the shot in his mouth and gave him a big kiss on the cheek.

Best Way to Handle a Drunk: I try to give plenty of warning to those that are pushing the envelope of vulgarity. When asked for that last drink, I challenge them, saying, "If you can drink 3 glasses of water in the next 10 minutes, I'll buy your last drink." I haven't bought one yet.

Favorite Bar for Your Nights Off: That depends on the night and the neighborhood. To chill in a T-shirt and jeans watching the Red Sox, you can't beat the Common Ground in Allston. I really like going to see live shows at the Paradise Rock Club. Banq is my favorite spot in the South End.



Least Favorite Drink to Make: Mojitos. Ah! They are tasty, but please order four at a time, if at all.

Worst Trick You Ever Played on a Patron: I had a very obnoxious guy that rang up a huge bill and harassed me to the point where it was difficult to serve my other patrons. Finally, he pays his bill, grabs my hand and doesn't let go. He says, "I left you a love note." He exits, to my relief, and I open the check folder to find he didn't leave a tip. At the bottom, he wrote, "If you want a tip, you have to come out for a drink with me. My number is 555-555-5555." A week passes, and I hold onto the number. Then a different and equally obnoxious guy demands a date, and I said that I would happily meet him at another bar after closing. "Just text me at 555-555-5555 around 12 am." I called the first "gentleman" from the restaurant phone and set it up. I hope they're very happy together.

Hangover Cure: Water the night before, followed by Vitamin Water Rescue and pâté. If you can stomach it, eating a little goose liver is like swapping out parts.

Drink of Choice: Anything with St-Germain. I also love Grey Goose pear with grapefruit juice and a proper Gosling's Dark and Stormy.

Signature Drink:
Black Velveteen
1 oz. St-Germain, 2 oz. Stoli Blakberi, 2 oz. white grape juice. Shake on ice and pour into a chilled martini glass. Top with a float of Champagne and garnish with a blackberry.

Drink, 348 Congress St., Boston (617-695-1806) drinkfortpoint.com

Bottled and Distilled in: Topeka, Kan.

Hobbies/Other Interests: I am in a band. It's called Wheelhouse.

Describe Your Style: My bartending style is as historically accurate as I know how to make it.

Describe Where You Work: The bar where I work has no printed cocktail menu, and I am blessed with block ice with which to make drinks.

Describe Your Regulars: My regulars are people who appreciate our efforts to make each person's experience a good one.

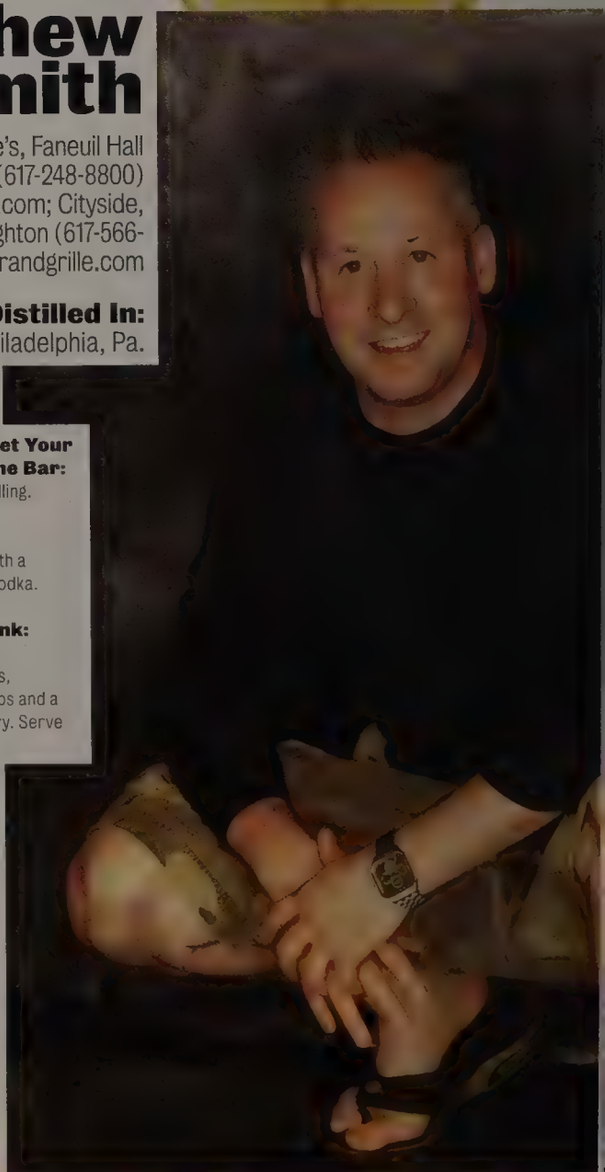
Why Do You Think They Return? They return again and again because they trust that I'm genuinely interested in their experience.

How Would Your Regulars Describe You? If you didn't know my name, you'd describe me as "that weirdo with the enormous arms."

Best Way to Handle a Drunk: With humor.

Favorite Bar for Your Nights Off: For off nights, I like an old man bar.

Hangover Cure: I recommend enough water to sink a battleship. And a Brandy Alexander.



Drink of Choice: An Old Fashioned.

Signature Drink:
The Northern Spy
1½ oz. applejack, 1 oz. fresh pressed apple cider (no preservatives, please!), ¼ oz. fresh lemon juice and ¼ oz. apricot brandy. Moisten the rim of a Champagne flute with lemon juice and sprinkle a mixture of cinnamon sugar onto it. Shake ingredients with ice, strain into the flute and top with 1 oz. or so of sparkling white wine.

Bottled and Distilled In: Philadelphia, Pa.

Describe Your Style: I'm a speed bartender.

Describe Your Regulars: Post-grads to young professionals.

Why Do You Think They Return? To quench life's thirst (that's the company motto), and the live music.

Your Trademark: My sense of humor.

How Would Your Regulars Describe You: The guy with the gray hair.

Most Interesting or Odd Patron Encounter: Richie Doucas. He's the real Cliff Clavin of Boston.

Favorite Bar for Your Nights Off: Toro, Solas, Franklin Café, the Playwright.

Least Favorite Drink to Make: Mojitos.

Worst Trick You Ever Played on a Patron: I sent someone to five bars in Faneuil Hall in search of "the glass magnet."

Favorite Bar Trick or Joke: Sending waitresses for mayonnaise slicers or having them de-lime Coronas.

Best Tip You Ever Received: Front row seats to Van Morrison.

Best Way to Get Your Attention at the Bar: Not whistling or yelling.

Hangover Cure: Mimosa with a splash of orange vodka.

Signature Drink:
Durgin's Delight
2 oz. Absolut Pears, 1 oz. apple schnapps and a splash of cranberry. Serve with lemon peel.

By Day: I'm a social worker, and I love it!

Describe Your Style: That definitely depends on the night and the customers. Sometimes, I need to be really fast and efficient, and other times, I have the luxury of relaxing, chatting and really getting to know some of my customers.

Describe Where You Work: A two-story club with four bars and plenty of room to dance. If you come on the right night, you just might spot a celebrity hanging out in one of our private booths.

Describe Your Regulars: Crazy, entertaining, hilarious partiers.

Why Do You Think They Return? Because I'm an amazing bartender, of course.

Your Trademark: Working alongside beautiful women. The girls I work with are absolutely gorgeous and so much fun. If I were a guy, I'd be jealous of me.

Most Interesting or Odd Patron Encounter: The funniest customers are the ones who try to convince us that they're famous or close to someone famous. It's so obvious that they're lying, but at the same time it's hilarious.

Best Way to Handle a Drunk: Water, on the house.

Favorite Bar for Your Nights Off: The Estate. Great music, beautiful women, tasty drinks, amazing dancers. And tons of new people to meet. What more could you ask for?

Least Favorite Drink to Make: Red Death.

Worst Trick You Ever Played on a Patron: Something we do that our customers never actually know about: Give them nicknames that describe something about them. A few of my favorites: Turtle, Porcupine and Hotel Guy.

Best Tip You Ever Received: Sold-out tickets to the Billy Joel concert.

Hangover Cure: Late-night pizza followed by mac 'n' cheese. Works every time.

Drink of Choice: I love a good red wine. Usually a merlot.

Signature Drink:
Watermelon Champagne Martini
Equal parts vodka and melon schnapps, a splash of cranberry juice, topped off with Champagne.

Embittered

An old-school tincture keeps up with the times.

By John Dyer

A few months ago, New York bartender Don Lee stopped by Drink for a "stage," a fancy term that means he poured cocktails as a guest barman for a night at the trendy South Boston spot. When he left, Drink was offering a new concoction: Don's Little Bitter.

Bostonians rarely give credit to New Yorkers so easily. But Benjamin Sandrof, Drink's principal bartender, knew Lee had struck a nerve in the zeitgeist of alcohol. The new beverage calls for 2 ounces of rum, lemon juice, simple syrup and an ounce of bitters—an enormous portion of the pungent digestif. Even cocktails built on bitters—say, the Cognac-based Sazerac—require only a few dashes of the stuff. Yet Don's Little Bitter worked. "It didn't occur to people six months ago to use that much bitters," Sandrof recalls.

Something was in the wind, and it smelled like patchouli. At around the same time that Lee was dosing his customers, bitters appeared on Adam Lantheaume's radar screen, too. A mixture of alcohol, herbs and spices, bitters hearken back to when cocktails had flavors that today would be considered peculiar, like celery or lavender. Lantheaume, the owner of the Boston Shaker, a cocktail supplier in Somerville, says that fruits and vegetables can be added, too. "Orange bitters are in a classic martini, like a 1900-era martini. The orange flavors help bring out the citrus in the gin."

As today's drinkers become more sophisticated, they're seeking more obscure tastes. "We're definitely at the beginning of this cocktail renaissance where people are digging back to Prohibition times, to the '30s, '40s, '50s and what was going on then and what people were drinking," Lantheaume posits. "That is bringing bitters along."

Enough of Lantheaume's customers have expressed an interest in bitters for him to offer a 90-minute course on them on June 8. (Visit thebostonshaker.com to sign up.) Lessons include the differences between brands like Angostura, Peychaud's and Fee Brothers, and the merits of bitters that can be drunk alone, such as Campari and Fernet-Branca, versus those used sparingly, like Angostura.

If you're interested in making bitters, ask L'Espalier's sommelier, Kate Moore, who homebrews them for drinks served at the Back Bay restaurant. Her recipe for Kate's Manhattan calls for a mixture of vodka and roasted orange zests, cloves, nutmeg, cardamom, star anise, coriander and caraway seeds. Over the course of a month, she alternates between letting the mash steep and reheating it with additives like simple syrup.

It's laborious, but Moore's devotion is an example of the budding, infectious enthusiasm for bitters among local cocktail connoisseurs. "I love the idea that I can contribute something I made with my own hands," she beams. "This isn't something you can buy necessarily."

Bottled and Distilled In: "I'm 100 percent Colombian (like the good coffee)"

Hobbies/Other Interests: Photography, bowling (with beers) and dining out.

Describe Your Style: Friendly and approachable, but formal when required.

Describe Where You Work: It's a tapas bar, very festive and romantic. You can have a big celebration or a first date, and then come back years later with your kids.

Describe Your Regulars: People who aren't afraid to have a surreal experience and those who like to be entertained by organized chaos and sparkly things.

Why Do You Think They Return? The best sangria in town. My wit. My Latin charm. I treat you like the king or queen that you are.

Your Trademark: My adorable, thick accent and my ruffled shirt, maybe?

How Would Your Regulars Describe You: That guy with the big nose who's always smiling.

Most Interesting or Odd Patron Encounter: I was asked by a movie producer to be in a slasher film. I wouldn't get to talk, I'd just get killed.

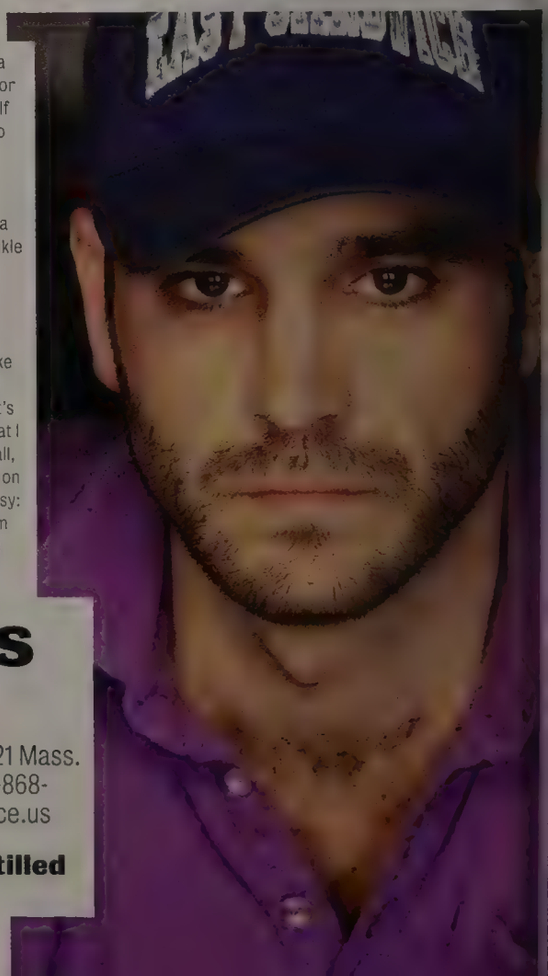
Best Way to Handle a Drunk: Make sure he gets home safe.

Favorite Bar for Your Nights Off: Cuchi Cuchi or wherever my friends are.

Least Favorite Drink to Make: Anything with cava (Spanish sparkling wine). They take forever to make, because it needs to be poured so slowly.

Worst Trick You Ever Played on a Patron: When a regular came in on a date, I announced, "Your ex called and said the baby needs diapers!" (We all had a good laugh.)

Favorite Bar Trick: Sometimes I bring out our small mechanical bull that charges to the matador song. (People actually love it.)



Best Tip You Ever Received: A $500 tip on New Year's Eve from the previously mentioned regular.

Best Way to Get Your Attention at the Bar: I'm always paying attention. No need to clap or break anything.

Personal Policy on Dating Customers: Better not to. If I date a customer and things don't work out, I lose a customer. Also, my significant other frowns on this.

Hangover Cure: Sleep very, very late and then treat yourself to a Colombian-style chicken soup in East Boston.

Signature Drink:
Green Fairy Mojito
Muddle 6–8 mint leaves with ice and lime juice (1 wedge squeeze). Add 1 oz. absinthe, 1 oz. pineapple juice and shake well. Pour over fresh ice into a rocks glass and top with ginger ale. Garnish with mint sprig and lime round.

Dennis Silva

Bottled and Distilled In: Sandwich

By Day: I'm also a student at UMass Boston, part-time, and I write what I think is quality poetry.

Hobbies/Other Interests: Skiing, Red Sox baseball, anything to do with summer and Cape Cod, video games (particularly World of Warcraft), seeing new places and cheese.

Describe Your Style: I'm mostly all business. What do you want? What do you need? Once that's taken care of, I can start clowning around. I'm a good listener but not a psychiatrist. Just someone to hear you out.

Describe Your Regulars: Almost everyone's a regular, whether it's once a day, once a week, once a month or once a year. There are the biotech lunch regulars, a different dinner crowd and people who are specific to breakfast or brunch, but I know or recognize nine out of 10 people that come through the door.

Your Trademark: A lot of purple, always a pencil behind the ear and usually a hat. The Cape Cod tattoo is a big crowd-pleaser, too.

Most Interesting or Odd Patron Encounter: It's Cambridge. Most people are odd. I've seen a lot of crazy shit, but the oddest encounter for me was a diabetic seizure on a busy Friday night. Everybody freaked out, and I had to keep saying, "Stay calm. Call the paramedics. Back the f--- up. Help will be here soon."

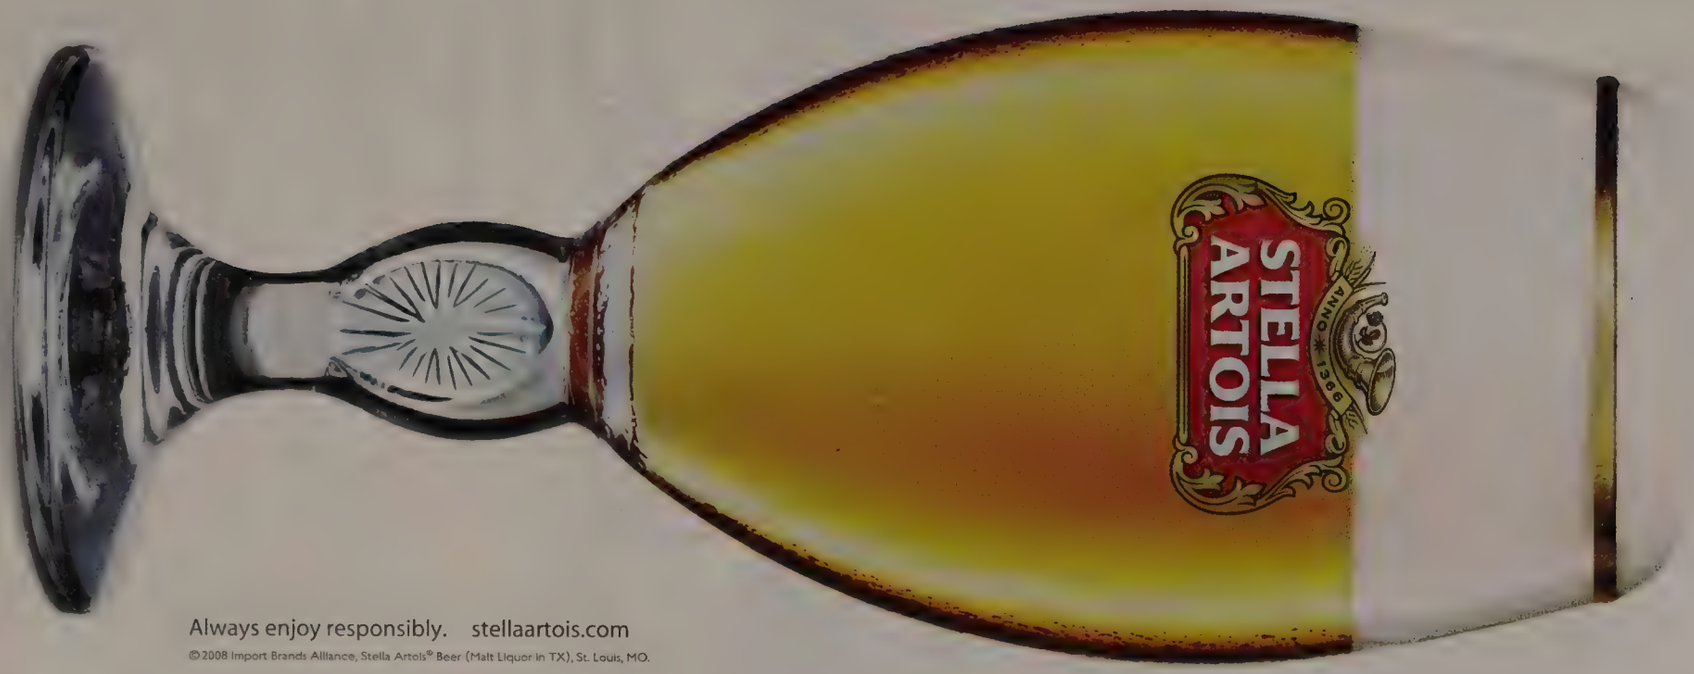
Least Favorite Drink to Make: When people ask for a SoCo and lime, I say, "Really? You can't think of anything better than that?" Also, anyone who asks for their whiskey or tequila chilled. If you want it cold, get ice in it. If you want a shot of whiskey, be a man about it. Most bartenders bitch about Mojitos. Me? No big deal.

Worst Trick You Ever Played on a Patron: A lot of my customers are friends and will drink whatever I put in front of them. They don't ask questions... and maybe they should.

Favorite Bar Trick or Joke: When people ask to see the menu, I tell them, "Sure, but you have to share with everyone." They look at me funny. Then I point to the blackboard. This helps me identify people who've never been here or might need a little extra attention. I also wow people when I tell them I have the wine list memorized, if they're willing to bear with me while I recite it: "We have one white and one red. Which color would you like?"

Best Tip You Ever Received: I have a regular who was a hard-working, sometimes homeless carpenter. He comes in about every other month. Since his rougher days, he won the lottery, so he takes care of me. He orders a Budweiser and a burger. I buy him a shot of Cuervo, always, and my man Cliff leaves a $100 on a $12 tab, always.

Best Way to Get Your Attention at the Bar: I see you. Don't worry. I see everyone. If you whistle, raise your hand or yell to get my attention, you move to the back of my mental line.



Hangover Cure: We have a pretty good Bloody Mary, but for me, it's a shot of Fernet and half a beer. Sometimes it doesn't go down so easy, but I feel better by the end.

Drink of Choice: Bud and a bourbon. I drink Pappy van Winkle at the Miracle, but almost any bourbon works for me.

Signature Drink: Also my drink of choice. I'll make you whatever you want. After all, you're paying for it and that's why I'm here, but if you ask what I would have, it's going to be a tall, cool Budweiser with a whiskey on the side. The preparation is easy: remove a bottle of icy Bud from the beer well, pour a generous shot of whiskey and enjoy.

Perfection has its price.

Of course it tastes better than other beers. We've had over 600 years to get the recipe right. Our esteemed brewery has been producing beer in Leuven since 1366. Which means we've been around a bit longer than most. Mind you, over the years our beer has witnessed the odd change or two. For instance, our customers no longer drink it to ward off the Plague, as they used to in medieval times. However, one thing has stayed the same after all these years. Stella Artois is still painstakingly brewed in a time-honored tradition with the choicest ingredients. Which is why our customers have kept coming back for more, even after 600 years.

Always enjoy responsibly. stellaartois.com

Bottled and Distilled In: Revere

By Day: I'm a paralegal at Pierce, Davis & Perritano in Boston.

Describe Your Style: Classy yet sassy.

Describe Where You Work: A wonderful, classic Italian restaurant and bar in the North End.

Describe Your Regulars: Everyone from tourists to Celtics to the girls who live upstairs, and all of them are always treated like family.

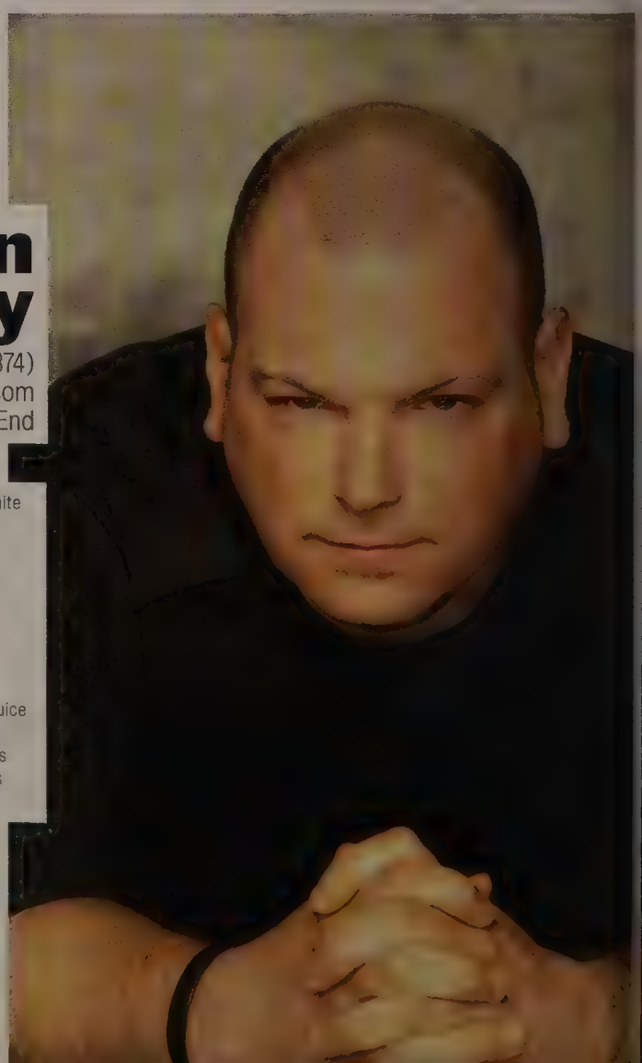
Your Trademark: My ability to create a drink you'll like, while making the recipe up as I go. A few simple questions, a pour of this and that, and you're guaranteed a drink you'll love.

How Would Your Regulars Describe You: I think a customer once called me "that cute little Italian girl with the big personality."

Best Way to Handle a Drunk: If they get a little out of hand, I just tell them that I can't serve them anymore because the manager said so. Usually, one of the waiters helps me out—a benefit of working with all Italian men who are protective of women.

Least Favorite Drink to Make: I have to say I hate making Key Lime Pie Martinis. So many elements and they take a while to perfect. Plus, they're messy.

Best Tip You Ever Received: $150 on a $300 bill.



Best Way to Get Your Attention at the Bar: Just yell for me: "Hey, Cristina! I need ya!" I'll come running.

Personal Policy on Dating Customers: Been there, done that. The bottom line is that you probably shouldn't because if you end up not liking them, they always know where to find you. Keep it professional yet friendly. You can make great friends, but find another dating pool.

Hangover Cure: Ginger ale and Campari.

Drink of Choice: Usually a glass of red wine, like a Chianti or Barolo, or Stoli Blueberi and soda.

Signature Drink:
Espresso Martini
A shot of espresso, 2 oz. Bailey's, 1 oz. French Kiss Vanilla Liqueur, 1 oz. Frangelico,1 oz. Kahlua. Shake vigorously until you can see a froth. Pour into a chilled martini glass with the foam on top. Garnish with three espresso beans for good luck.

Clerys, 113 Dartmouth St., Boston (617-262-9874) irishconnection.com

Bottled and Distilled In: South End

Describe Your Style: Comfortable and fun.

Describe Where You Work: It's a neighborhood bar, kind of like Cheers.

Describe Your Regulars: All walks of life. Students, investment bankers, construction workers, doctors and nurses.

Why Do You Think They Return? They know they're going to get what they want at a decent price and with good service.

Your Trademark: A smile, and hopefully I'll make you laugh.

Best Way to Handle a Drunk: Talk to them like you would talk to a 5-year-old, and be nice.

Least Favorite Drink to Make: Lemon Drop.

Worst Trick You Ever Played on a Patron: Betting a regular he couldn't eat a full cup of mayonnaise. If he did, we would pay his tab.

Best Tip You Ever Received: Still waiting.

Best Way to Get Your Attention at the Bar: Be patient. I'll get to you.

Hangover Cure: Vanilla White Russians.

Drink of Choice: Harpoon UFO.

Signature Drink:
Tang

The White Horse Tavern, 116 Brighton Ave., Allston (617-254-6633)

Bottled and Distilled In: Rahway, N.J., and Brighton

Describe Your Style: It goes between finesse and volume, always attentive and learning.

Describe Where You Work: A comfy neighborhood bar nestled between BU and BC in Allston.

Describe Your Regulars: They run the gamut from recently-turned-21 college students to young professionals to locals and Allston/Brighton natives.

Your Trademark: Consistency.

How Would Your Regulars Describe You: "Oh, you mean the bartender with the tattoos?"

Best Way to Handle a Drunk: With respect, leaving their dignity intact.

Favorite Bar for Your Nights Off: Eastern Standard, the Sunset Cantina.

Least Favorite Drink to Make: No such thing.

Best Way to Get Your Attention at the Bar: Eye contact and patience.

Personal Policy on Dating Customers: Customers are people, too. You never know when you're going to meet "the one."

Hangover Cure: Vitamin Water.

Drink of Choice: Usually a Budweiser, maybe with a Jack Daniels shot.

Signature Drink: Currently, I've been working on a drink that begins with muddling 3 or 4 cubes of fresh watermelon. I add ice, 2 parts Ketel Citron and 1 part sour apple schnapps. Shake and strain over ice. Squeeze and garnish with a lemon wedge.

Bottled and Distilled In: North Easton

By day: I'm out there auditioning to find acting jobs—so if you know of any...

Describe Your Style: Surly, noncommittal and full of sage wisdom.

Describe Where You Work: The Beehive is funky, challenging and loud. House of Blues is artsy and iconic—a lot of history to live up to.

Why Do You Think Your Regulars Return? I get people to relax, or I make fun of them.

Your Trademark: Red hair.

Most Interesting or Odd Patron Encounter: I was working brunch and a woman ordered cereal. I asked if she wanted whole milk or skim, and she said, "Yes. I'll have bacon."

Favorite Bars for Your Nights Off: Harry's and Zocalo in Brighton.

Least Favorite Drink to Make: Definitely the Blue Horizon.

Worst Trick You Ever Played on a Patron: Some guy asked me for my number, and I gave him my mom's number. I guess it was more of a trick on Mom.

Favorite Bar Trick: Asking someone to name the actors who portrayed The Magnificent Seven. If they can't, I make fun of them.

Best Tip You Ever Received: "Put $50 on Mine That Bird."

Best Way to Get Your Attention at the Bar: Wait patiently and make eye contact. Please don't yell, wave or call me "Honey."

Hangover Cure: Mashed potatoes.

Drink of Choice: Jack Daniels.

Signature Drink: The BeeSting
Muddle Thai basil, a bird pepper, lime wedges and a dash of simple syrup. Add Charbay Meyer lemon vodka, shake on ice, strain into a chilled martini glass and garnish with a bird pepper.

Jennifer Murphy

Stella, 1525 Washington St., Boston (617-247-7747) bostonstella.com

Bottled and Distilled in: Dorchester

By Day: I also have an event planning company called Ki Bar. We throw private events where we provide everything needed [for] a fabulous party: A unique drink list, customized food for the occasion, music and anything else that will allow the host and guests to relax and enjoy themselves.

Describe Your Style: Professional but fun.

Describe Where You Work: People say it reminds them more of Miami or New York.

Why Do You Think Your Regulars Return? I think we have the best bar staff in Boston. There's a good chance that if you come in more than once, we'll remember your name and/or your drink.

Most Interesting or Odd Patron Encounter: Years ago, when I was bartending at Bomboa. It was New Year's, and I went to check on a couple waiting for the valet. All of a sudden, I saw this guy backhand his girlfriend, so I tapped him on the shoulder. He turned, and I decked him.

Best Way to Handle a Drunk: I try to be proactive and not let it get to that point in the first place. If all else fails, apologize politely with a smile and refuse service.

Favorite Bar for Your Nights Off: Anywhere in the South End. I've yet to meet a bar I didn't like.

Least Favorite Drink to Make: Long Island Iced Tea. It just leads to trouble.

Worst Trick You Ever Played on a Patron: I prefer to play tricks on my coworkers. At Bomboa, we used to put Saran Wrap on the pint glasses, so that when another bartender went to pour a draft, they'd get soaked.

Best Tip You Ever Received: $800, cash. You know who you are, and I hope to see you soon. Rent's due.

Best Way to Get Your Attention at the Bar: Walk in the door.

Hangover Cure: Coconut water. I swear it works.

Signature Drink:
Al Fresco
Equal parts Absolut Ruby Red, ruby red grapefruit juice, a squeeze of fresh lime and a little simple syrup and Sprite. Serve in a martini glass. Great for the patio season.

By Day: I'm a fashion designer and own my own company, Catalina Fashion.

Describe Your Style: Sexy and fast.

Describe Where You Work: It offers something for everyone. The first floor is a laid-back lounge with good music. The second and third floors have pool tables and huge TVs for people who want to watch sports and the fourth floor is a nightclub for dancing.

Describe Your Regulars: They're so loyal to me and follow me wherever I go. Most of them have turned into great friends.

My Trademark: Stiletto heels and crazy outfits (especially for theme parties).

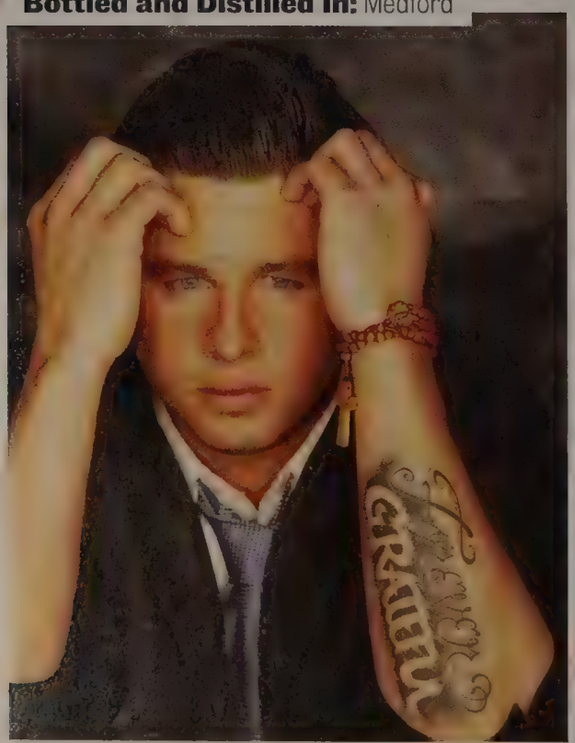
Best Way to Handle a Drunk: I give them a "special" drink on the house. Ice, water and a lemon.

Least Favorite Drink to Make: Anything with milk.

Best Tip: I don't like to talk about money.

Best Way to Get Your Attention at the Bar: Smile and be nice.

Personal Policy on Dating Customers: I never date customers. I dated a previous boss and married him.



Hangover Cure: More drinks.

Signature Drink:
The Catalina
Mix equal parts limoncello and Ketel One Citron with a splash of sour mix. Shake on ice and strain into a sugar-rimmed martini glass. Top with a splash of Sprite.

Bottled and Distilled In: Medford

By Day: I started a company, Rip-n-Run Productions, a few years back with two of my best friends. When I'm not bartending, I'm usually planning our next major event or party.

Describe Your Style: I think as bartenders, we have to be able to adapt to our customers' needs, and everyone is different. Sometimes I'm a friend, sometimes a counselor. At the bar, we blend the signature old-school cocktails of yesterday with a new twist. Throw in some liquid nitrogen, a little molecular mixology, and you have the creative cocktails of tomorrow. It's truly a unique experience.

Why Do You Think Your Regulars Return? Honestly, I think it's the dynamic between the entire staff and the beautiful decor. Oh, and me, of course.

Your Trademark: The Monday night mix tape.

Best Way to Handle a Drunk: Easy. Just be polite but firm. We've all been there. Well, not me, but most people.

Favorite Bar for Your Nights Off: When I'm not working, you can usually find me at Bond or maybe the Foundation Lounge.

Least Favorite Drink to Make: Long Island Iced Tea. C'mon. Grow up.

Best Tip You Ever Received: Someone told me: The next time you go out, before you leave the house, look in the mirror and take one accessory off.

Best Way to Get Your Attention at the Bar: Be polite. Wait your turn. I'm pretty fast. I'll get to you. And it doesn't hurt to tip well.

Hangover Cure: A few strong drinks and you'll be fine.

Drink of Choice: Absolut Mango and ginger. It's new. Try it.

Signature Drink:
Asian Manhattan
1½ oz. rye, 1 oz. dry sake, ½ oz. ginger syrup, 2 dashes of orange bitters and ¼ oz. sweet vermouth. Shake and serve straight up or on the rocks.

Bottled and Distilled In: New Orleans, La.

By Day: I'm slowly making my way through nursing school.

Describe Your Style: Feisty yet efficient! I can make a drink for the service bar while taking a guest's dinner order, all while telling one of my regulars that the date they brought in the other night was "trifling."

Describe Your Regulars: Eclectic, to say the least. I have my older married couple who always come in for their Sunday supper, and I have my South End "ladies" who are as fierce as can be, and everything in between.

Why Do You Think They Return? I'll always remember your drink (maybe not your name) and do my best to make sure you never have to wait too long.

Your Trademark: I tend to snap my fingers for emphasis—not necessarily a trademark, but we did name a drink after it.

How Would Your Regulars Describe You: Sassy. Everyone calls me sassy.

Most Interesting or Odd Patron Encounter: A disheveled man walked into the bar and asked if he could maybe borrow or buy a spoon.

Best Way to Handle a Drunk: Stop serving them, to start. Then throw down a skillet of our cornbread and a large glass of water and tell them they can't leave until they're both all gone.

Least Favorite Drink to Make: Anytime a guest knows the name of it but can't tell me the ingredients. If you can't tell me what's in it, then you shouldn't be drinking it.

Best Tip You Ever Received: Words of wisdom (not money) from a 70-something-year-old lady named Mary Francis who told me, "As long as you can hold the glass, keep sipping!"

Best Way to Get Your Attention at the Bar: Anything but tapping on the bar. I'm your bartender, not your bitch.

Hangover Cure: McDonalds, all the way. There's nothing a 10-piece chicken nuggets and a quarter pounder can't cure.

Signature Drink: The Ginger... Snap! (A martini with a whole lot of attitude.) Fresh ginger muddled with lemon and simple syrup, 3 oz. of light rum and a splash of cranberry juice. Shake and strain into a martini glass, and garnish with crystalized ginger.

Describe Your Bartending Style: I'm definitely a good listener. I set 'em up, you knock 'em down.

Describe Where You Work: A relaxed, casual atmosphere where you can enjoy a good drink, watch a game and maybe make a connection.

Describe Your Regulars: An eclectic group of successful men and women who live in the area and who make me laugh on a regular basis.

Why Do You Think They Return? I think they come back because they like to be entertained by us, and for the cast of characters who make their way through our doors every evening.

How Would Your Regulars Describe You: "Oh, you mean the good-looking kid with the cheesy hair?"

Most Interesting or Odd Patron Encounter: Probably the guest who followed me up and down the bar waving his arms at me to order two waters. He then proceeded to pull up two chairs from the patio to the cheese and cracker display and went to town on the free cheese.

Best Way to Handle a Drunk: Get them away from the person they're trying to take home or who is trying to take them home. Find out who they came with and then get them in a cab.

Favorite Bar for Your Nights Off: I like to go to the Publick House in Brookline for great beers, great food and knowledgeable, sometimes surly, bartenders.

Least Favorite Drink to Make: Anything that involves muddling and more than two bottles.

Favorite Bar Trick: Introducing two people who are complete opposites after they've had a few and watching the fireworks. I also love flicking the lit match while it's still in the book and having it slide in front of the lady in need of a light. Still a winner, even if she does have to take it outside.

Best Tip You Ever Received: Never stand up in a canoe.

Best Way to Get Your Attention: Yell "Hey, buddy, pal, bro, ace, chief, captain, etc."

Personal Policy on Dating Customers: No dating customers, because even if you give a fake name, number, age or whatever, they can always find you.

Best Hangover Cure: A large pepperoni and onion, well-done, a small order of chicken tenders, four Poland Springs, two Gatorades and any televised sporting event.

Drink of Choice: That would have to be a Hendricks gimlet on the rocks with fresh lime.

Signature Drink: Touch of Grey
2 ½ oz. dry gin, ½ oz. Earl Grey simple syrup and the juice from half a lemon. Shake and serve straight up in a cocktail glass with a lemon wedge and honey stick garnish.

live ultimately, drink responsibly.

UN-POLLUTING COMMUTING

WHETHER YOU'RE going green or hoping to lose a few extra pounds for bikini season, Bay State Bike Week will get your gears turning. Designed to cut carbon emissions and abolish road rage in favor of Lance Armstrong–style commuting, the statewide event takes place May 11–17 and culminates in a festival on May 15 at City Hall Plaza.

On that day, bikers will pedal with police escorts down selected streets for a free breakfast, bike expo and music before heading, sweaty and exhausted, to the office. So dust off the old two-wheeler. With the auto industry in shambles, let the age of Schwinn and Huffy begin.

SCOTT GREENAN

See baystatebikeweek.kintera.org for a complete list of events and convoy routes. The Bike Week festival takes place on May 15 7–10 am at City Hall Plaza.

Very Jerry

Get Sprung Relationships are hard, especially if your boyfriend is cheating on you with your transsexual roommate, who also happens to be his first cousin. You need a place to vent, a place to rip the wig off that hooker who's been creepin' on your man. You need Jerry. Television's most notorious talk show has been dropping expletives and splitting polyester booty shorts for more than 18 years. But you haven't seen (bleep) until you've seen Jerry Springer: The Opera at the Calderwood Pavilion through May 30. The opera follows Springer on a tour through hell and depends on the audience to recreate the psychotic set. Remember to save your final thoughts for the end. Kyle Wright

Adventureland ★★★★ A familiar story told with surprising delicacy, Greg Mottola's autobiographical coming-of-age tale feels like a John Hughes movie directed by François Truffaut. Set in a pitch-perfect 1987, Adventureland stars Jesse Eisenberg as a pompous Renaissance studies major forced to take a dead-end job at a ramshackle Pittsburgh amusement park after a family financial setback torpedoes his post-collegiate plans. Smitten with Kristen Stewart's boozy, broken Em, and unaware of her affair with the park's married sleazebag maintenance man (Ryan Reynolds), he drifts through a lazy summer's worth of go-nowhere days and dashed hopes, learning first-hand lessons about heartbreak along the way. We've seen this story dozens of times before, but Adventureland is suffused with a beguiling sense of melancholy that feels heartfelt and true. Mottola tones down the broad, raunchy comedy that made his 2007 Superbad a smash and aims for something quieter and more affecting. In the end, it's the story of a kid discovering that the world is a much smaller, sadder place than he'd ever imagined. (At Coolidge Corner, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Coraline ★★★ Neil Gaiman's psychologically spiky novella gets a fairly faithful rendering from gifted stop-motion animator Henry Selick, who previously tickled eyeballs with his beloved The Nightmare Before Christmas and the terrific but underrated James and the Giant Peach. Voiced without much gusto by Dakota Fanning, our title lass is a neglected only child who happens upon a secret tunnel leading to an alternate universe where doppelgängers of her distracted parents are suddenly affectionate and doting. Of course, they do have buttons for eyes, but that's probably the least creepy thing about them. A psychedelic trip down a dark rabbit hole of youthful anxieties, Coraline is never less than a visual marvel, even when Gaiman's leaps of dream-logic become more head-scratching than mind-blowing. If you have the option, I'd check out the 3-D version, which wisely foregoes the usual gimmicky gotcha effects and instead uses the wondrous Real D technology to further envelop you in Selick's richly detailed, carefully rendered world. Also, it's nice to see a heroic cat, for a change. (In the suburbs.)

Duplicity ★★★ ½ Tony Gilroy's sophomore feature is so breezy with classic Hollywood charm, one might not even notice how cynical it is. Clive Owen stars as an MI6 sellout who ditched Her Majesty's secret service for a more lucrative career spying on frozen-pizza patent disputes. He's got a bad history with Julia Roberts' CIA bombshell, and Gilroy's film rather ingeniously eliminates any real-world stakes in setting these two working at cross-purposes for vainglorious lotion CEOs played by Tom Wilkinson and the amazing Paul Giamatti. Or are they up to something else entirely? Leapfrogging back and forth through time, Duplicity is a tricky, sophisticated affair that demands your undivided attention. The giddiness comes from the pleasure these actors take in Gilroy's dialogue, whether it's his rapid-fire banter or some juicy sidewinding monologues. Telling lies for a living takes a toll, and Duplicity asks: How do you love someone after you've discovered they're as full of crap as you are? (In the suburbs.)

Fast & Furious ★★★ Forget Brokeback Mountain. The best male love story of recent years was 2001's street-racing sleeper The Fast and the Furious, wherein Vin Diesel and Paul Walker ignored their girlfriends and made goo-goo eyes at one another while driving 120 mph. (There hadn't been such a gleefully homoerotic courtship in a blockbuster since Iceman snapped his teeth at Maverick in Top Gun.) Their careers in shambles, the original cast has reunited for this fourth installment of this guilty-pleasure franchise, which characteristically favors speed over logic and demonstrates a sly awareness of its own absurdity. Diesel's outlaw driver again teams up with Walker's undercover Fed, and they eye each other longingly while taking down a drug lord drag racing heroin shipments on the Mexican border. Deftly directed by Justin Lin, it's campy, turbo-charged nonsense. But how can you resist recurring shots of Diesel folding his Popeye arms in front of a towering, pumping oil rig. Paging Dr. Freud! (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Gomorrah ★★ Matteo Garrone's pitiless expose of Italy's Neapolitan Mafia is full of despair and sobering statistics. Unlike their romanticized neighbors in Sicily's La Cosa Nostra, the Camorra has no illusions about tradition, honor or any of that Don Corleone junk. There's nothing here but money and murder. Working from a best seller by Roberto Saviano (who shares a screenwriting credit) Garrone traces this vile gang's reach through every level of society, from everyday street toughs, through haute couture sweatshops, all the way to toxic-waste dumps that poison an already dying community. But while Gomorrah is structurally impressive, it's also emotionally inert. Admirably avoiding sentimental mob movie clichés, Garrone forgets to offer anything in their place. The movie is a sociological study taken from such a jaundiced distance that there's nothing for us to latch onto. The characters are nasty, shallow people whose inevitable deaths come as a relief to the audience. Sure it's informative and well researched, but it's a grind. (In the suburbs.)

Knowing ★ M. Night Shyamalan doesn't have to feel so ashamed anymore. Dopey even by the relaxed standards of Nicolas Cage movies, Alex Proyas' dunderheaded doomsday tale casts the over-actor as a grieving MIT professor prone to hysteria and fits of atheistic petulance. This presents a problem

Industrial Light and Magic

PREQUELS ARE TYPICALLY the bane of the sci-fi universe. There's something about the richness of fantasy worlds that compels both filmmakers and audiences to crave backstory. But they often amount to little more than exercises in diminishment, chipping away all the mystery and wonder that gave these works their mythological pull in the first place. Seriously, is it even possible to watch the first Star Wars now without picturing Darth Vader as a snot-nosed teenaged brat?

That's why director JJ Abrams' Star Trek reboot is such a wonderful surprise. I doubt I've been alone in mocking this picture, sight unseen, for months now. It takes when his young son happens upon a 50-year-old piece of notebook paper containing numerical codes for every man-made or natural disaster from the past five decades, which leaves the boozed-up Dr. Nic to unlock the exact time and place of the impending apocalypse. Around the margins are a bunch of blond guys in trench coats looking like refugees from the 80s' band Wang Chung and attempting to abduct children for mysterious purposes. Knowing is ridiculous and offensive, smuggling a fear-mongering religious agenda into multiplexes beneath a veneer of CGI effects and disaster porn. Cage's comical caterwauling can only distract for so long, and the film eventually feels like the big-budget version of one of Kirk Cameron's Left Behind movies. (In the suburbs.)

Monsters Vs. Aliens ★★★ Like a snarky little offshoot of Pixar's crew of bona fide artistes, DreamWorks Animation tends to specialize in pop-culture references and dated inside jokes aimed at the long-suffering parents in the audience. Its latest endeavor will never be confused with Wall-E, but at least it's a cohesive piece that boasts a charmingly 50s' retro sensibility and some dazzling 3-D effects. Reese Witherspoon voices an unlucky bride struck by a meteorite, now horrified to find herself growing seven stories tall and quarantined in a secret government facility with a bunch of icky monsters. Once aliens attack, these outcasts become America's last line of defense. There's some very funny voice work by serious gall to recast characters as iconic as Captain Kirk and Mister Spock with a bunch of fresh-faced barely-knowns, and to promise in an annoying ad campaign "This is not your father's Star Trek." Intrepid YouTubers have hilariously rescored the trailer with theme songs from Beverly Hills, 90210 and Muppet Babies, and the Web roars with accusations of blasphemy and heresy from Trekkies across the land.

The punchline here is that no matter what the billboards tell you, this actually is your father's Star Trek. Sure, there's a fresh coat of CGI paint and everybody's impossibly good-looking, but Abrams has captured the upbeat sense of adventure that defined Gene Roddenberry's original 1960s series. More so than any Trek project in decades, this one conjures the camaraderie, easy humor and, most importantly, the swagger we associate with the headstrong Jim Kirk and his analytical, pointy-eared pal. Rare for a landscape dominated by dour popcorn blockbusters, this one isn't afraid to be fun.

Chris Pine is saddled with the unenviable task of strapping on William Shatner's girdle and playing the young, cocky Kirk. It's no small feat bringing the Enterprise captain's larger-than-life bravado to the forefront without teetering into camp, but Pine is more than up to the task. He's not doing a Shatner impression, per se, but he carries himself with a similar sense of self-regard, walking into every room like he owns it and bulldozing authority figures as if born to command.

When we meet James Tiberius Kirk, he's a troublemaking townie, picking bar fights near Starfleet's Iowa Academy. He gets more than he bargained for after putting the moves on Zoe Saldana's leggy Uhura, but the ensuing fisticuffs garner the attention of Bruce Greenwood's Captain Christopher Pike, who dares the troubled youth to clean up his act, make something of himself and maybe even boldly go where no man has gone before.

Chris Pine is saddled with the unenviable task of strapping on William Shatner's girdle.

Greenwood is marvelous, evoking just the right touch of glorious, forthright sincerity when espousing Roddenberry's utopian ideals. Most science fiction is fixated on grim visions of the future, but Star Trek has always been defined by positivity and hope. I've always assumed that the reason its followers are such fanatics is because of this inclusive aspirational quality, one that might have seemed cheesy a year ago, but feels well-timed for the age of Obama.

Kirk's skirt-chasing antics arouse the ire of Starfleet prodigy Spock, played here by Zachary Quinto with a bit more volatility and angst than expected. Torn between his Vulcan call to logic and his messy human emotions, Quinto's Spock is a work in progress, and it's one of the screenplay's sweeter touches that he and future best friend Jim Kirk instantly despise one another.

But what, you might ask, is the point, when we all know exactly where this is headed? Well, writers Roberto Orci and Alex Kurtzman, previously responsible for the odious Transformers and the idiotic TV show Fringe, have devised a crafty solution to prequelitis. A nasty Romulan named Nero (Eric Bana) exploits a rift in the space-time continuum to settle a grudge with the 150-year-old Ambassador Spock (Leonard Nimoy, in a lovely cameo.) The villain's planet-crushing antics also lay waste to four decades of Trek canon, sending this young crew off on an alternate timeline with a clean slate. In other words, anything can happen.

Much like Casino Royale, Abrams' Star Trek serves up familiar pleasures in a way that feels fresh. All the phaser battles, sexy green girls and transporter beam antics you'd expect are present and accounted for, just with slightly unexpected spins. By the time Nero's plan has been vanquished, the original crew of the Enterprise (including Karl Urban's uncanny Bones McCoy and Simon Pegg's hilarious Scotty) is at last assembled on the bridge, warping out for what we hope will be a happy series of sequels. May they live long and prosper. ✖✖✖

Hugh Laurie as the world's smartest cockroach, while Seth Rogen is typecast as an amorphous, dimwitted blob. As was bound to happen sooner or later, Stephen Colbert plays the president. See the IMAX 3-D presentation, which distracts from any screenwriting weaknesses with a healthy dose of eye candy. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Observe and Report ★★½ For anybody who thought Taxi Driver just wasn't funny enough, writer/director Jody Hill's sophomore effort works a sick comedic riff on Scorsese and De-Niro's seminal antihero. Except this time Travis Bickle is played by Seth Rogen, and he's a mall security guard. Paul Blart this is not. Rogen bravely throws himself into the role of a delusional bully taking a break from his prescription medicines just long enough to grow dangerously obsessed with rescuing Anna Faris' dim cosmetics girl from a serial flasher. There's a thin line between hilarious and creepy, and it's a line Observe and Report seems proud to ignore. Much like Hill's cult favorite The Foot Fist Way, it's a tale of puffed-up machismo mocked by an indifferent suburban wasteland. The commitment to mortification grates on the nerves, but at least it's a distinct vision. Then comes the climax, a sequence so magnificently sustained with a punch line so wrong it's impossible not to forgive just about everything that came before. (In the suburbs.)

The Soloist ★★ Robert Downey Jr. stars as L.A. Times columnist Steve Lopez, a motor-mouthed depressive who befriends a homeless, schizophrenic musical prodigy, played by Jamie Foxx. Lopez writes an inexplicably popular series of columns, congratulating himself for befriending

Foxx's babbling musician. This scores him a book deal and some journalism awards, but poor Foxx is still out on the street, mumbling to himself and playing Beethoven on a broken violin. Susannah Grant's screenplay spends a moment or two wondering how much of this "friendship" is really opportunistic exploitation on Lopez's part, but the movie is too cowardly to stay there for very long. The Soloist moves about in a muddle, never quite sure of what story it's supposed to be telling. Flashbacks to Foxx's traumatic childhood and mental breakdown are interlaced with mundane details about Downey's broken marriage, until it becomes one of those movies where the minority figure's tragic fall is just another way for the callous white guy to learn important life lessons. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

State of Play ★★ ½ Russell Crowe's goofy, game performance is the best reason to see this so-so Beltway thriller, which was awkwardly condensed from a six-hour BBC miniseries by director Kevin Macdonald. Crowe stars as a scruffy, hard-drinking reporter for a struggling D.C. daily, and he has a grand time selling the more preposterous aspects of the picture. It seems the mistress of Ben Affleck's rising-star congressman committed suicide, or was she perhaps murdered by a Blackwater-esque corporation Affleck's investigating? The film cruises along at an agreeable pace, piling on a few unsurprising plot twists and developments with the brisk efficiency of an airport paperback. Will anybody really wonder if this mess is going to somehow involve that homeless guy we saw executed over a mysterious briefcase during the opening credits? Or what about when an actor as famous as Jeff Daniels is hanging around in background without much to do for an hour? Do you think he might be involved? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Sugar ★★★ ½ Gorgeous and understated, the latest film from Half Nelson writer/directors Anna Boden and Ryan Fleck follows Miguel "Sugar" Santos (Algenis Perez Soto), a promising pitcher from the Dominican Republic who finds himself ground in the gears of Major League Baseball's recruiting system. Avoiding what we've come to expect from a typical sports movie, Sugar has no interest in cliché climaxes like a ninth-inning strikeout. It's a film about the day-to-day mechanics of a sports industry and what it feels like to be an outsider in America. With a tenuous grasp on the English language, Sugar and his teammates find themselves dropped in a small baseball-crazy town in Iowa, and the inevitable culture clash is rendered with uncommon sensitivity. In fact, my one quibble with Sugar is that the film may be a bit too sensitive. This is such a gentle, compassionate picture, a little crassness may have given it more dramatic punch. But how often does one complain that a movie is too thoughtful? (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Sunshine Cleaning ★★ Misleadingly sold as a wacky romp from the people who brought you Little Miss Sunshine, director Christine Jeffs' latest is a muted, melancholy affair with strong performances from Amy Adams and Emily Blunt. The two play depressingly dysfunctional sisters who start their own crime-scene cleanup business as a way to stave off poverty. At least for a little while, the movie boasts a plainspoken sadness and a poignant sense of day-to-day drudgery. But first-timer Megan Holley's screenplay isn't content to leave well enough alone, piling on predictable late-movie revelations and a rash of melodramatic contrivances that only serve to undercut the acting. The great Alan Arkin phones this one in by recycling his goofy grandpa shtick to diminishing returns. He belongs in a different movie, one that's taking place hundreds of miles away from Adams' sorrowful smile. Sunshine Cleaning's patently false, upbeat ending feels not just like a cheat, but a betrayal. (At Kendall Square, Waltham Embassy and in the suburbs.)

Tyson ★★★ Sometimes objectivity is overrated. You won't find outsider perspectives or differing viewpoints in director James Toback's compelling portrait of the deeply troubled former heavyweight champion. Tyson is Iron Mike in his own words. Culled from countless hours of interviews with the battered bruiser, it's a first-person history of one of the strangest, saddest flameouts in all of professional sports. From his harrowing start pulling preteen Brooklyn drug hustles through his subsequent reformation under the tutelage of trainer Cus D'Amato, the boxer's reflections are quite funny and often shocking in their candor. (Who knew he won the title while suffering from gonorrhea?) Then comes the fall. Before long we're well into the rape conviction, the ear biting and the freakshow tattoos, and Toback begins fragmenting the frame into split-screens and multiple audio loops to reflect his subject's mounting paranoia. Of course this is all more than a little blinkered and self-serving, but boxing's last superstar is nonetheless a tragic, riveting narrator, his tangled syntax alone a wonder to behold. (At Harvard Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Watchmen ★★ ½ A landmark 12-volume doorstop written by Alan Moore, Watchmen is something like the Finnegan's Wake of superhero comics. Filmmakers like Terry Gilliam, Darren Aronofsky and Paul Greengrass have all tried and failed to adapt it over the years, leaving 300 director Zack Snyder stuck wrestling Watchmen's meaty monologues and massive backstory into a crowd-pleasing blockbuster entertainment. He gets about halfway there. Set in an alternate 1985, in which Nixon is serving his fifth term and the Cold War is heating up, the tangled tale finds a long-dormant band of caped crusaders spurred back into action by the murder of one of their own. The screenplay is undone by the stubborn density of the source material as it takes the film over an hour just to establish the players and their histories before the story can even get started. I doubt it will even make any sense to anyone who hasn't read the comic. (In the suburbs.)

X-Men Origins: Wolverine ★ After an acrimonious split with series director Bryan Singer following 2003's nifty X2: X-Men United, 20th Century Fox seemed lost on how to proceed with their superhero franchise. First X3: The Last Stand scrapped Singer's carefully developed allegories of alienation and killed off the most interesting characters, and now Wolverine seeks to demystify the tragic history of Hugh Jackman's cigar-chomping scene-stealer. As far as revelations go, the movie doesn't offer much that wasn't already covered in X2. The only surprises here are the dour mood, shoddy special effects and complete absence of levity. Directed by Gavin Hood, who recently helmed the rancid war on terror melodrama Rendition, Wolverine takes itself remarkably seriously for a movie about a man with knives coming out of his knuckles. It's a somber affair, and Jackman is forced to tamp down the character's roguish Han Solo charms in favor of a lot of brooding, scowling and howling upward into clichéd overhead shots. No more of these, please. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

for homes with hot water or steam radiator heat

If a home doesn't have forced air heat, installing ductwork for central air conditioning can mean major remodeling and expense. But a Unique Indoor Comfort ® system doesn't require large metal ductwork,or major remodeling.

Cool air is delivered through small 2" flexible tubing that can easily be weaved through walls and ceilings, around studs and other obstacles. All that's visible are small round outlets in every room. What's more, Unique Indoor Comfort ® offers Lennox high efficiency equipment.

Proven in thousands of homes, easy to install Unique Indoor Comfort ® is the central air conditioning solution for the older home.

JAM NATION

Phish returns to the summer circuit in near-vintage character.

Phish
plays Fenway Park May 31 and the Comcast Center June 6.

Paul Robicheau

FENWAY PARK HAS NEVER seen the likes of Phish, the eclectic and eccentric jam-band phenomenon that's launching its first tour in five years at Boston's hallowed ballyard on May 31.

Sure, Fenway has hosted concerts by rock's biggest headliners, including the Dave Matthews Band, which plays the two nights before Phish (the longtime comrades may even sit in with each other). But in the 20 years before its amicable 2004 breakup, Phish became a subculture unto itself, transcending a musical intersection of the Grateful Dead and Frank Zappa with fluid, floating jams and quirky, conceptual humor that spawned a colorful, massive fan base.

Even more exciting, the Vermont-born band is already back to near-prime form as evidenced by its March reunion shows at Virginia's Hampton Coliseum, which fans call the Mothership for its flying-saucer shape. Reunions aren't supposed to sound this good, especially for a band that thrives on its intuitive chemistry, something that lapsed in Phish's later years.

Phish posted the three Hampton shows (first as free MP3s) on its Web site, and they stand favorably alongside new CD and DVD releases from the quartet's mid-90s heyday. Phish hit some miscues at Hampton, but blew past them with spirit and confidence. Guitarist Trey Anastasio is back on track after drug rehab, and the others (especially keyboardist Page McConnell) have assumed more prominent musical roles.

Notably, Phish is embracing the graceful prog-rock of its early repertoire, having boldly opened its first show back with "Fluffhead," a 15-minute suite that hadn't been played since 2000, largely because the band couldn't nail its intricate changes. The revival of similar nuggets "The Divided Sky," "Split Open and Melt," "It's Ice" and "Reba" also bodes well for summer. The improvisation hewed tightly to the compositions, making room for stacked sets that dipped into bluegrass and funk.

Each night of Hampton averaged 28 songs and four hours in length, a schedule that probably won't fly at this summer's curfew-conscious venues. The group is currently recording a new album with producer Steve Lillywhite, but the only track debuted at Hampton was "Backwards Down the Number Line," a chugging, countrified glide with potential.

Hampton also hosted some well-rehearsed Phish curiosities that fans had grown used to only dreaming about. Drummer Jon Fishman stepped out to inverse-blow a vacuum cleaner solo during "I Didn't Know." The quartet sang barbershop a cappella in "Grind." And Anastasio and bassist Mike Gordon locked into mini-trampoline choreography for "You Enjoy Myself," which closed with a weird, in-synch vocal jam.

Phish has whetted appetites for its summer tour with archival releases as well. The group just packaged eight CDs of its three-night 1993 stand at Atlanta's Roxy, though the box's only essential artifact is the legendary middle show where the band quoted Phish songs within Phish songs. Fans could pay less to just download that one performance at livephish.com, which dangles a stash of other great shows (including those on Halloween where Phish entirely covered the Beatles' White Album and Talking Heads' Remain in Light as musical costumes.)

However, the mother lode of Phish releases is the Clifford Ball, a new seven-DVD box that chronicles the first of the group's seven weekend festivals. The 1996 Ball was one of the best (topped only by Big Cypress in the Everglades, where Phish greeted the millennium with a midnight-to-dawn set) and would become a blueprint for Bonnaroo, where Phish plays June 12 and 14.

For the Clifford Ball, Phish took a decommissioned Air Force base in upstate New York and transformed it into a playground, satiating 70,000 fans with six full sets—plus an after-hours jam on a flatbed truck that rolled past the fans' campgrounds. Phish also built a mock village square, had gliders fly overhead to a local orchestra matinee and augmented a few intense jams with acrobats and fireworks. The wonderfully filmed and packaged DVDs capture it all, rewarding fans with a real treasure, even if they don't score tickets this summer.

Fenway ranks as one of Phish's biggest non-festival shows, so people might expect surprises. Just don't count on the Rock 'n' Roll Hall of Fame returning the giant hotdog car the band once flew across the Boston Garden. ✖✖✖

Peaches and Cream When it comes to dirty talk, Peaches means business. Dropping F-bombs all over the airwaves since the release of her hit "F the Pain Away" in 2000, the Canadian artist is now back to send the world another shock wave through her electroclash tunes. At first listen, her recently released fourth album, I Feel Cream, doesn't seem to follow her usual scandalous style. But don't let the girl who once wore a beard on an album cover fool you. As much as I Feel Cream's self-titled first single sounds sweet and romantic, the song's chorus gets down in terms too graphic for this respectable magazine. The singer also adds a punk edge to the clean and straightforward "Talk to Me," the record's first song featured in a video. Balancing genres with talent and attitude, the former elementary school drama teacher brings her wacky act to the Paradise Rock Club on May 17. Needless to say, leave the kids at home.

Chances Are You've Been Sitting on a Cure for Cancer

Before Lance, even before LeMond, there was the PMC, a 190-mile bike-a-thon that brought cycling to the American consciousness. Since 1980, the PMC has raised almost $240 million for cancer research. Today, 100 percent of every rider-raised dollar goes directly to that cause.

PMC 2009 – August 1 & 2 – 6,000 cyclists from 36 states and 6 countries will ride. Last year, the PMC raised $35 million for cancer research at the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. Are you ready to take the Pan-Mass Challenge?

Human Interest

Since the days when our prehistoric ancestors drew stick figures on cave walls, the human body has inspired artists to approximate it. Rebecca Kinkead engages with that tradition by returning to the primitive lines and shapes that would eventually coalesce into Mona Lisa's smile and Rubens' fleshy women. See her works in the Clark Gallery's exhibit Figure and Form through May 30.

Urine Trouble

Organ-ized Crime

Few people would donate a kidney to help an estranged family member. So it follows that asking a relative to circumnavigate the globe to find one on the black market would also be a tough sell. But Daniel Asa Rose did just that for his crazy cousin, whose name was stuck at the bottom of a transplant list. In Larry's Kidney, the two head to China on an organ quest that stirs up a lot more trouble—from lies, to spies, to mail-order brides—than they planned for. Rose shares his adventure on May 19 at Brookline Booksmith.

IMPROPER Sightings!

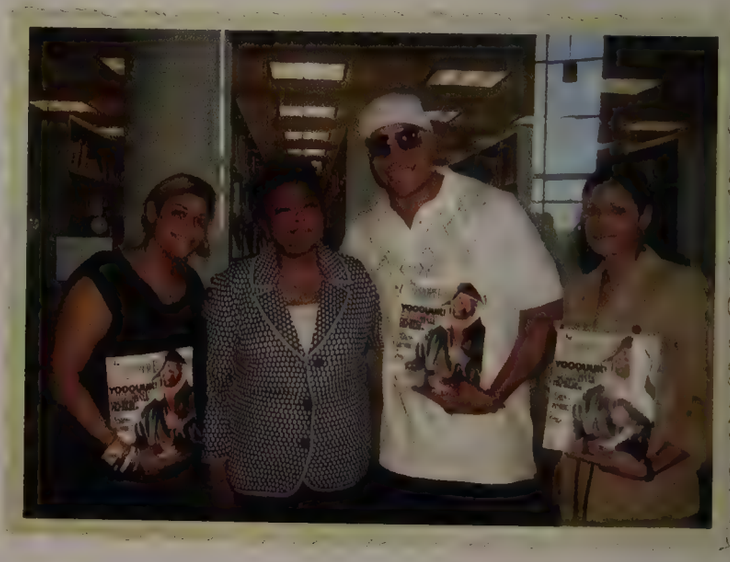
ATTENTION BOUNTY HUNTERS! BONUS POINTS TO ANY-ONE WHO CAN CAPTURE AN IMPROPER READER BEING A CUT-UP AT THE LAWN MOWER WORLD CHAMPIONSHIPS, HELD MAY 21 IN KRAUTSAND, GERMANY

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip. Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.



Tom Petersen and Michaela Hagerty loved every part of their trip down to Spring Training in Fort Myers, Fla. Well, everything except Julio Lugo.

James Ceurvels, Adam Kelly and Phil DeVasto were in Seoul to watch South Korea beat North Korea in soccer. Kim Jong-il was so upset, he didn't torture anyone for weeks.

While relaxing in Oahu, Tia Feuerstein and Leah Reich found this napping sea turtle. The poor thing was worn out after the arduous hour-long trek from the gentle, balmy ocean to the soft sand.

Despite their lack of hair extensions, bamboo earrings, Fendi bags and bad attitudes, Violator vice-president Claudine Joseph, Mass Bay Community College President Dr. Carole Berotte Joseph and her assistant Nurys Camargo got LL Cool J to smile.

Send high-resolution digital photos (at least 500K file size) to sightings@improper.com, or mail professionally printed color photos (min. 3x5) to: IMPROPER Sightings, THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN MAGAZINE, 142 Berkeley St., 3rd floor, Boston, MA 02116. Please include the exact photo location, full names of all people pictured, your phone number and e-mail address. All photos become the property of THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN MAGAZINE and will not be returned. Ink-jet or laser-printed photos cannot be accepted.

On Marathon Monday, April 20, more than 500 names and faces power-walked to the Lenox Hotel's legendary "Longest Running Party" for rooftop views of the finish line and marathon mingling in Azure and City Bar.

Boston City councilor & mayoral candidate Sam Yoon and his family

Evan Saunders, and his uncle, Jeff Saunders, president of Saunders Hotel Group, and Howard Manly, executive editor of Bay State Banner, and his daughter Wren

Andreia Fernandes, hostess, and Peter Blanchard, manager; both at Café Escadrille

David Boutin, accountant of Boston, and his wife, Katherine Boutin, product safety manager at StrideRite

Robert W. Murray, owner of Café Escadrille and Murray Hills, Inc.; Dave Peterson, director of management at BBN; Stephane Colinet, wine director at Café Escadrille; and guest speaker Matt Chivian, portfolio manager at Martignetti Companies

Sip and Savor

On Thursday, April 30, Café Escadrille in Burlington held a Grand Scotch Tasting featuring more than 40 single-malt Scotches. Guests enjoyed dried fruits, crushed toffee dark chocolate and rose petals to help bring out their drinks' flavor profiles.

SAMURAI BOSTON [827 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-236-7672. www.samurai-boston.com] From the toro to the Pink Lady maki, every bite melts in your mouth. Samurai Boston offers innovative rolls and martinis that are a nice change for those bored with traditional styles, but don't worry if someone in your party isn't a raw fish fan, Samurai Boston offers an extensive menu of Korean and Japanese cuisine. Located in the Back Bay, across the street from the entrance to the Prudential, Samurai Boston is open daily for lunch and dinner.

SCOLLAY SQUARE [21 Beacon Street, Boston, 617-742-4900. www.scollaysquare.com] Scollay Square is warm and inviting, featuring American comfort food and a sophisticated cocktail list at reasonable prices. A neighborhood bistro-style restaurant, we are a great meeting place for friends to eat, drink and socialize. New chef Jason Stump creates mouth watering daily specials, just introduced for the 2009 season. The menu also features a 3 course menu, served nightly, for $22.00. Join us weekdays for lunch, all week for dinner and Sundays for brunch and our famous "Make Your Own Bloody Mary Bar".

SORELLINA [One Huntington Avenue, Boston, 617-412-4600. www.sorellinaboston.com] Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Robert Jean prepare contemporary regional Italian/Mediterranean food in this sophisticated setting in Copley Square. Matching the creative cuisine is a warm-modern design highlighted by a glowing mural and expansive floor-to-ceiling windows. Settle into soft leather upholstery and enjoy the finely-crafted room that's welcoming, comfortable and elegant. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TAVERN ON THE WATER [Pier 6, Charlestown Navy Yard, 617-242-8040. www.tavernonthewater.com] Tavern on the Water is known for its summer days but is open year round. It has free parking all winter long; the view is the same and features special menu items during the winter months. Yes they even have tablecloths and all glassware during the winter. How about a bottle of Cakebread Chard for only $$65.00? When the warm weather hits it is the place to be with its outside 200 seat patio facing the Boston skyline.

Last Scene Here { JONATHAN SOROFF }

Divalicious...

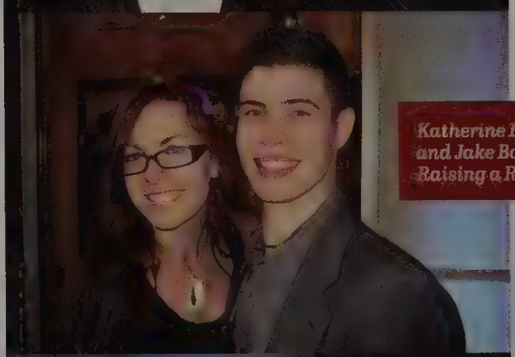
The deafening roar you might have heard coming from the ballroom of the Four Seasons Hotel on a recent Saturday night was applause for Oscar- and Grammy-winning headliner Jennifer Hudson at the One Night Only gala to benefit Roxbury Comprehensive Community Health Center.

Jennifer Hudson at One Night Only

Sponsored by, among others, The Improper Bostonian, the evening drew a strictly A-list crowd that included Governor and Mrs. Patrick, emcee Karen Holmes-Ward, board chair Ron Walker, the improbably tall Howard Manley, the ever affable Darnell Williams, Greek tycoon Stamatis Astras, the delicious Debbie Di-Masi and her hubby, Sal, Boston Ballet honcho Mikko Nissenen, the stunning van Delft sisters, supermodel Gina Fox and a few hundred others, who clapped, whooped, hollered, plotzed and sang along during the intimate, hour-long concert.

David McCullough & Sebastian Junger at Literary Lights

As one attendee put it, "You know it was a great party when you're hoarse for a week afterward."



All in all, a flawless evening, and further proof that Simon Cowell doesn't know sheep shit from apple butter.

Superlatives R Us...

It takes some serious cajones to call an event The Greatest Party on Earth, but the fundraiser for Artists for Humanity, held at the Epicenter, came as close as possible to living up to the boast.

There were break-dancers and samba dancers, acrobats and a marching band, not to mention the non-stop disco grooves of Booty Vortex, which kept everyone on the dance floor until way past their bedtime.

Spotted among the throng: Wellesley skinhead Andy Rushford, the triple threat of Emily Kumler, Harley Bilzerian and Jessica Naddaff, international male model Randy Gross, international party boy Jeremy Savlen, white-hot artist Tristan Govignon, über-hipster Michael Krupp with the oh-so-stylish Liana Peterson and all the rest of the cool kids, who sipped Champagne and tossed back cocktails like it was Carnival, Mardi Gras and a Roman orgy all rolled into one.

Katherine DiFillippo and Jake Boynton at Raising a Reader

Bob Pattison and Kevin Youkilis at Raising a Reader

So was it actually the greatest party on earth? Well, as one guest put it, "At least there's free parking."

Required Reading

The ballroom was awash in candlelight, the tables were decorated with ivy and books (which would be eagerly snatched up by guests at the end of the night) and the combined IQ in the room was enough to make MENSA look like a bunch of half-wits when the Associates of the Boston Public Library held their Literary Lights dinner to honor local authors at the Park Plaza Hotel.

The super-sparkly crowd included head honcha Vivian Spiro and her husband, Lionel, keynote speaker David McCullough, fashion plate Erin Gilligan and her other half, Hoyle Kim, ink-stained Brahmin Ben Bradlee Jr. and the dewy Jan Saragoni, Cambridge filmmaker Sally Fay, éminence grise Sherif Nada and the lovely Mary, towering intellects Christopher Lydon and Nicholson Baker, poet and honoree Major Jackson and so on and so forth down the list of Boston's brainiacs and bibliophiles.

Summing the evening up, one guest said, "This is the one party of the year where I'm sure I'm not the smartest person in the room."

Required Reading, Part II...

There was some serious juice in the room when Raising a Reader held its Goodnight Moon Gala, hosted by Red Sox giant Kevin Youkilis and his prettier half, Enza Sambataro, in the atrium at Davio's.

Present were media types like Billy Costa, Peg Rusconi and Liz Brunner, philanthropist extraordinaire Don Rodman, restaurateur Steve DiFillippo and his daughter Katherine, squired by the absurdly handsome Jake Boynton, visionary Seth Hosko, TV producer Jennifer Donaldson, diamond dealer Donna DePrisco and hordes of equally high-wattage others.

The organization, which provides books to children and promotes literacy, partnered with Youkilis' charity, Hits for Kids, and part of the fun was watching rabid Red Sox fans jockeying for a spot near the third baseman, who patiently posed for countless photos.

Then there was the guest who said, "I'm a gay man who hates sports. The only thing that interests me about Major League Baseball is how cute the uniforms are." ✖✖✖

Under a Clear, Blue Sky

When we last left off, I was carrying around 25 extra pounds and contemplating baby names. One contender was Ryder, Jack Kerouac's alias for environmentalist and poet Gary Snyder—which tells you something about my love of nature. Given the Kate Hudson connection, I abandoned my outdoorsy inclinations. Anyway, the poor little guy spent his first months inside, strolling Copley Place and the Pru, yet another prisoner of Boston's winter. So spring's arrival, and heading to the Public Garden, felt like freedom.

In an earlier life, it took riding a long board and zipping through trees to create that sensation. If that still sounds like you, check out our piece on a forest canopy tour in the White Mountains. If keeping both feet on the ground is more your speed, leave the extreme sports to photographer Arno Minkkinen, who has scaled cliffs to capture the right shot. This issue contains five of his pics, including an original for The Improper.

Of course, you don't have to taste danger to experience the outdoors. Going to Fenway counts as communing with nature in this town. So does attending a Boston Breakers game at Harvard Stadium. There you'll see cover girl and soccer star Heather Mitts in action. Mitts has won Olympic medals—and appeared in FHM magazine. That's what I call inspiration. These days, I'm content to just keep strolling.

ACT OF COD

THE MOST STRIKING object on the Boston waterfront—more than the giant Hood milk bottle, more than the ICA building, more even than the admission fees at the Aquarium—is a 70-foot powerboat named Codzilla. Driven by Captain Bill Muise, 36, the vessel is explicitly meant to be a monster. Two 1,400 horsepower water jets churn her around the harbor at 40 miles per hour. Rock music pounds from the hull's 30 waterproof speakers. And, in case you miss the point, the boat has giant teeth painted on the prow.

"She's great!" laughs Muise, a former accountant. "I can't quite get her to do a 360, but I can get her to do 270 degrees from 40 knots."

Codzilla is Boston Harbor's version of a roller coaster, dousing paying customers in noise, harbor water and a ridiculous back story about mutant codfish from Deer Island. Muise's nautical career wasn't always so hysterical. After hanging up his charcoal gray suit 10 years ago, he returned to his native element. "I grew up in Gloucester, and I kind of always liked the ocean," he says. "All the men in my family fished, and most of the women worked processing or freezing fish. But I didn't really want to go fishing for a living."

Instead, he ran deep-sea charter fishing boats and ferries and the occasional whale watch. For a phase, he dabbled in lobstering. Then Boston Harbor Cruises gave him the wheel of the Codzilla.

"It was a little nerve-racking at first trying not to hit anything," he admits. "The biggest thing about her is the speed! But she handles really well."

Muise particularly relishes bounding the vessel over wakes, including its own. "In the warm weather, it's fun to get wet."

Drink of the Moment

Uncharted Territory

The Nevins Cocktail isn't an original drink, but that doesn't mean you can't make it your own. Most classic cocktails have a back story. Some have several. The Ward 8 was invented at Locke-Ober in 1898 in honor of politico Martin Lomasney and the district that won him election. Or it wasn't. You have a choice of urban legends.

But the origins of the Nevins Cocktail, found by the Independent's bar manager, Evan Harrison, in the back of a Mr. Boston recipe book, remains a mystery. "I was with my friend Dave from Deep Ellum, and he said, 'I don't believe you, there has to be something,'" Harrison recalls. "But he looked for a half-hour and couldn't find anything."

Although the Nevins Cocktail ($8) has been around for a while, it's not a drink you see very often. Which is curious since it's a warm-weather cocktail that's appealing to fans of brown liquor. The mix of bourbon, apricot brandy, grapefruit and lemon juice is sweet and tart. A substitution of grapefruit bitters for the normal Angostura keeps the drink light, and the use of Fighting Cock, 103-proof whiskey burns through the sugar before things get sticky.

Then there's Harrison's description. He certainly has a way with words. On winter fruit: "You can get as much juice out of a leather jacket as you can out of a lime." So it's only a matter of days before he comes up with his own back story. But there's still time to plant a flag. Tall tales and cocktails make wonderful drinking partners.

Good Eats

Hey Mambo...

Take one of Hanover Street's charming outdoors cafés, add one of its small salumerias, roll it into one and you've got Bottega Fiorentina's Newbury Street location—without the Mike's Pastry double-parking headache. Brookliners have been supping and shopping at this Tuscan store's original spot for years, scarfing down sauced-to-order noodles and sandwiches. Try the Italiano; it comes piled high with freshly sliced meats and cheeses for less than the price of a day's worth of designer coffee. Best of all, the Back Bay finally has a lunch place with good delivery.

ASK THE EXPERT

KENNY PEARSON, MANAGER AT HILTON'S TENT CITY

Q: WHERE'S THE BEST PLACE TO CAMP AROUND BOSTON?

The Boston Harbor Islands is one of the best camping locations Massachusetts has to offer. The best thing is that you don't need to spend half your weekend getting there because it's right outside the city. There are 19th-century forts to explore (Fort Warren), campfires on the beach, wild rabbits and views of Boston on a clear day. The best thing of all is there are no RVs and concrete slabs. You just have to catch the hourly ferryboat.

HAIL MARYS

Nick tackles women's football.

SPEAKING FOR MEN, I've always felt the core problem with watching women's sports is that they seem like the cheap alternative to a more popular product. It's a Hydrox, when I'd rather just have an Oreo. Please notice that (a) I didn't disparage women's sports, and (b) I dragged my entire sex into this column. So if the whole cookie analogy was offensive, yell at the nearest man, not the messenger.

It's not a knock on talent. I know I couldn't drive past Heather Mitts if she hopped on one leg and let me use my hands. I know Candace Parker would humiliate me on a basketball court, and not because she's female, but because she can dunk and would do so on my face. But I know Kevin Garnett could do the same to her. That's just the way it is.

Unlike soccer and basketball, football seems to exist outside the concept of equality as an activity that's uniquely male, like Civil War reenactments, or farting. Women playing tackle football comes up every few years when a high-school girl petitions to play with the boys, or when the Lingerie Football League unleashes a media blitz. (Don't forget the New England Euphoria home opener against the Miami Caliente on Oct. 2!)

Even that sentence looks ridiculous, never mind the image of wild bikini fury at the 50-yard line, but it represents all I knew about women's professional football until earlier this month. Somehow, the Independent Women's Football League, 1,600 women strong, has been off my radar. Founded in 2000, the IWFL has 41 teams spread across the country, from the Southern Maine Rebels to the Southern California Breakers. Our local Tier I team, the Boston Militia, plays at Dilboy Stadium in Somerville, and on May 16, I went to see the action.

For another point of view, I brought a woman with me. Her initial enthusiasm was underwhelming. "I think it'll be as entertaining as the NFL," she predicted. "And I don't even like the NFL." In fairness, she's from Detroit, and they haven't had many reasons to be excited about football lately.

With a program in hand, I scanned the names to see who sounded hot. (Not because I'm sexist, but because I'm childish.) What I found was every Ginger Snow and Roxy English was counterbalanced with a name seemingly focus-grouped for football. Nikita Payne? Mia Brickhouse? Mia Brickhouse sounds like a sentient being sent from the future to destroy football as we know it.

She's actually really good, too. The whole team is, a fact immediately made clear when the Militia ran back the opening kick-off before Linkin Park had faded from the sound system. They quickly ran up the score to 19-0, at which point they faked the extra point and went for two, a deliciously diabolical tactic reminiscent of the 2007 Patriots. The Militia bring the pain on both sides of the ball, though, eventually shutting out the Philadelphia Firebirds 60-0.

With the local men's teams losing their grip on dominance, it's fun to watch a hometown squad massacre somebody again. But the real payoff is that these women are actually from your hometown. Wide out Ginger Snow is from Boston. Quarterback Allison Cahill, whom my companion called "a little lamb" but who throws more like a lady Doug Flutie, is from Uxbridge. And the Brickhouse family was cheering in the stands, no doubt thrilled to be beamed back from Rutland, post-Judgment Day.

With the uniforms on, you're not hyperaware that the Militia is a women's football team. They run fade routes, bells get rung and there was even a T.O.-esque excessive celebration penalty. "They're clearly skilled, they clearly practice, but the most amazing thing is that they clearly do this just because they love football," marveled my companion, before adding, "But they should have male cheerleaders."

I don't think I'd have the balls for the job. ×××

AISLE ANNOY YOU

TO THE PREPPY ASIAN GIRL ON THE L.A.-PHILADELPHIA US AIRWAYS FLIGHT: The airline messed up all of our tickets. I was traveling with my husband, and you were alone. When the flight attendant finally figured our places out, I was sent to the middle seat of a row, with you by my side. My husband got the same place in the row ahead of us. That's when I (very, very politely) asked you to switch seats with him, so I could spend the overnight flight by his side. Not only was I sick, but I also had gotten bad news from back home, where a dear friend had just passed away. You acted like the spoiled little girl you proved to be, stuffed animal in hand, when you refused to sit anywhere other than an aisle seat. Bottom line, we both spent the night rubbing shoulders. I was miserable, sneezing and coughing. You fell asleep and I honestly thought more than once about throwing your cute teddy bear toward the cockpit. I consider myself to be a very friendly person. Dealing with people like you, though, makes me want to spread the worst kind of flu. Anonymous

To the Not-So-Law-Abiding Bicycler:

I don't like to see anyone get hurt, but when you were weaving in and out of cars on Boylston Street during heavy traffic because of Emerson's commencement, it was sweet vindication to see you get smacked by a cab door and bite the pavement. Fortunately, you weren't seriously injured. Those cuts and bruises should serve as a reminder that bikes should follow the same traffic laws as cars, and just because you can pump your Huffy and take up less space, you don't own the road. Maybe you should invest in training wheels and start fresh. Not Typically Sadistic

To the BU Students on the 66 Bus:

Now, waiting almost 40 minutes for a bus on a Saturday night would be enough to sour my mood, let alone having to squeeze my scrawny self into a crowd of thoughtless BU hipster D-bags. All I wanted was to get on my way, not get shoved, hard, into the handrail not once, but twice, and did I mention the third time on your way out? No, no, it's OK; I guess the ability to even say, "Oh, sorry, my bad," isn't included in your tuition.

Hot Cava

Not that we've had much cause to celebrate lately, but U.S. sales of sparkling wine are in free fall. Part of the problem is that most people associate bubbles with Champagne, which is priced the exact wrong way for a recession. But only about 15 percent of the sparklers produced worldwide come from this premium French wine region. Among the best of the rest is Cava, the traditionally made Spanish version. A bottle will generally set you back less than $15.

The major reason bubbly has gone by the wayside is that we don't think about it except when marking an occasion. In reality, dry sparkling wine like Cava is fantastic with all kinds of everyday food. Although the market is dominated by a few mega-brands, here are three from boutique producers that really stood out as winners in my recent blind tastings.

Marques de Gelida Brut, 2005 (Blanchard's, Allston) $16. This bone dry wine is a bit creamier on the palate. It has a trace of Chardonnay in the blend, which contributes to the aroma of buttered apples and toast. With a rich texture and lengthy finish, this is a Cava you can easily serve with meaty, luscious shellfish, like crab or shrimp.

Poema, Brut NV (Wine Emporium, Boston) $11. Sourced from grapes in northeastern Spain, Poema is a sleek, balanced wine. With fresh aromas of apple and peach, the clean, dry, crisp flavor profile shows a trace of intriguing minerality. This is a well-balanced, all-purpose sparkler, ideal as an aperitif on a hot day, or as complement to raw shellfish, smoked salmon or fish salads at brunch.

Segura Viudas Brut Reserva, NV (Bauer Wines, Boston) $10. This artisan producer's wine shows the traditional smoky, toasty elements exhibited by sparklers with long aging on the yeast. At the same time it's bone dry, fresh and pear-like, with undertones of apple, cinnamon and spice. I would serve this with an array of fruit and cheeses or, alternatively, with some mildly hot Thai preparations.

Going Out

FISH FOOD

Chef Daniel Bruce gets the same question every year at the Boston Wine Festival: Where should I take visitors for fish? So when the Boston Harbor Hotel decided to replace the Intrigue Café, he suggested a seafood restaurant. Bruce is seen as Boston's Bacchus, but the Rowes Wharf Sea Grille, which opened May 8, allows him to shift gears. "People know me as a wine and food guy," he acknowledges. "But more than anything, I enjoy cooking with fish."

As a counterpoint to Meritage, his upstairs flagship where the focus is on flavor profiles, at the Sea Grille the emphasis is on fish. A casual start to the menu highlights the approach, with "For the Table" including cod-filled empanadas ($14) and crisp, light peekytoe crab rangoons ($15). "Everyone loves crab rangoons, but unfortunately, most don't have much crab in them." Not a problem here. Entrees include halibut with saffron risotto ($27) and sea scallops ($29), along with options for the seafood-averse. Although the crudo of the day ($15), be it hamachi, barramundi or local striped bass, could create a convert.

The venue, with its model yacht and upholstery in shades of blue and sea-foam green, looks like a hotel seafood restaurant. But the Grille is distinct. There's seating for 85 outdoors and by the water. It doesn't share a kitchen with the other Rowes Wharf venues, leaving Bruce's staff to focus solely on their fish. And ideally, it brings a name closer to the surface when relatives come to town. NICK ALTSCHULLER

FRIENDS AND RELATIONS

A comedy of tangled family ties

FROM THE OPENING kvetchologue in which widowed Denise protests her husband's will, novelist Elinor Lipman winks down from high atop her humorous scaffolding.

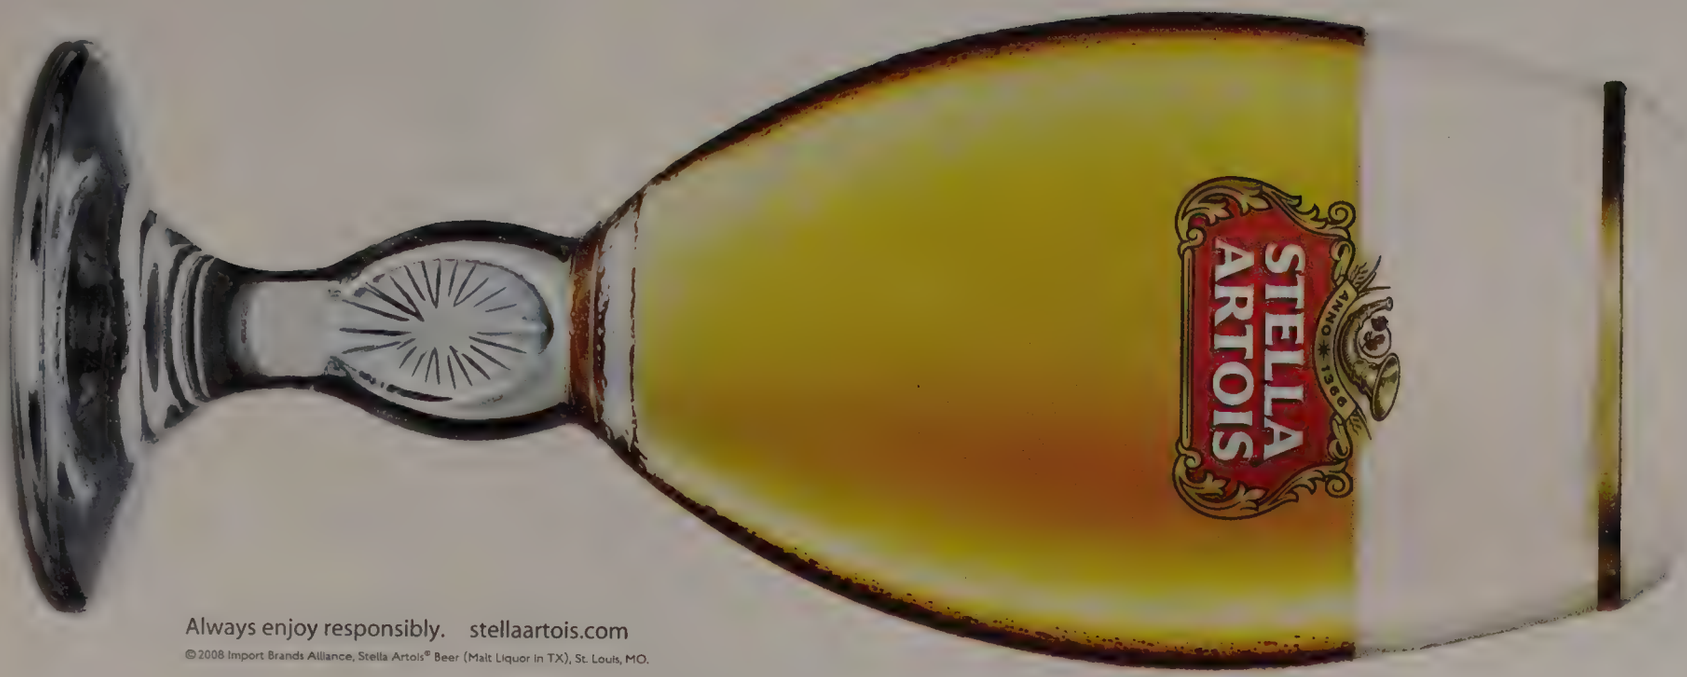
Denise was previously married to Henry, a lawyer who's now gay, and she's estranged from Thalia, her daughter from an even-earlier marriage. In an uproarious jumble of fun, Henry reconnects with twenty-something Thalia, a wannabe actress. His good humor and her frisky mischief make them an offbeat pair who operate on a sizzly wavelength in the style of the fast-talking comedies of the '30s. Proving that "family" can have many shifting definitions, Henry helps Denise keep her inheritance. She duly evolves from annoying to lovable as she skips from job to improbable job like an overaged Girl Friday.

The Family Man
by Elinor Lipman

A humorous yarn about a gay lawyer reconnecting with his step-daughter.

Meanwhile, naughty little Thalia is hired to tickle the paparazzi's interest posing as the girlfriend of a fading horror-movie star. This so-called "fauxmance" itself takes many a twist. The cozy bundle of buddies—oh, yes, and Henry finds love—restores our faith in the productive support-grouping of nutters. ✖✖✖

Beauty



WELL POLISHED

Any serious nail biter can tell a great manicure from a lousy one, so I took my damaged digits to MiniLuxe and put the new organic mani/pedi to the test. To start, they dipped my feet into a warm vitamin-enriched bath, then buffed them with a disposable file and rubbed them with Dead Sea salt and mango shea butter. Delighted with the outcome, I hoped for a mani miracle (my toes, after all, aren't the problem). MiniLuxe didn't disappoint. Starting off with some natural sanitizer, they used mango hand cream, organic cuticle oil and acetone-free polish remover. The results were amazing. No pink cuticles, no jagged edges, no trace of biting whatsoever. I've tried bitter apple polish, fake nails, even sitting on my hands, but this might actually get me to quit. Though they do look tasty. AMANDA KNORR

Perfection has its price.

Of course it tastes better than other beers. We've had over 600 years to get the recipe right. Our esteemed brewery has been producing beer in Leuven since 1366. Which means we've been around a bit longer than most. Mind you, over the years our beer has witnessed the odd change or two. For instance, our customers no longer drink it to ward off the Plague, as they used to in medieval times. However, one thing has stayed the same after all these years. Stella Artois is still painstakingly brewed in a time-honored tradition with the choicest ingredients. Which is why our customers have kept coming back for more, even after 600 years.

Always enjoy responsibly. stellaartois.com

Strawberry Fields

This is about as short and sweet as it gets. For a few precious weeks—roughly June 20-July 4—New England fields flush a familiar shade of scarlet. Strawberry season at Ward's Berry Farm, and at many other orchards, marks the unofficial start of the annual pick-your-own season, a delightfully hand-staining, jam-inducing activity that changes colors as the bushes continue to burst. (Blueberries and raspberries to follow.) Unlike other waterlogged crops, these actually taste as red as they look—though a scoop of nearby Crescent Ridge Dairy vanilla never hurt anybody. Shortcakes optional.

ICARUS' FINAL FLIGHT

A landmark closes.

PUT AWAY YOUR TRAY and bring your seat to its fully upright position; it's finally time for the long flight of Icarus to come to an end. Owner/chef Chris Douglass is selling the South End icon. After 31 years, don't expect a sudden good-bye; instead, watch for a curtain call of special dishes and assorted celebrations when the sale goes through. No word yet as to what will replace this landmark, but it's a safe bet that the focus will be less on culinary inventiveness than on an appealing price point.

THAT THEME CONTINUES at Post 390, slated to open in October in the new Clarendon Building on the corner of Stuart Street. Eric Brennan, formerly the executive chef at Excelsior, will take charge of a menu much simpler and more downscaled than Excelsior's. Farewell, foie gras; hello, steaks, ribs, fried chicken, and macaroni and cheese. As for decor, the dining room will be decorated to look like an "upscale tavern," spokesperson Nicole Barrick says.

MEANWHILE, BACK AT the space formerly known as Excelsior, another new restaurant will debut around the same time as Post 390. A joint effort from the owners of Harvest and Grill 23, and the London-based MARC (Marlon Abela Restaurant Corporation), the project is unnamed and still in the conceptual stages. However, it looks like the menu will lean toward Mediterranean/French in a casual setting.

MORE UPBEAT NEWS: By the time you read this, Paul O'Connell, owner/chef of Chez Henri, will have opened the doors of Chilmark Tavern on Martha's Vineyard. No surprise: local seafood and produce will be mainstays.

DOWN HOME

The Local cooks up fresh pub grub.

WHERE THERE'S A DILL The Local's fried pickles and mustard-crusted pork loin

WHEN I ARRIVED AT the Local, a spacious, upscale saloon tucked into a corner of West Newton, I was surprised to find chef Brian Counihan in street clothes, welcoming guests at the door. He made both me and my guest, Jason Bond, executive chef of Beacon Hill Hotel & Bistro, feel right at home. And despite Counihan's casual attire, he was clearly paying close attention to every dish coming out of the kitchen. He even delivered most of them to the tables.

By way of introduction, Counihan told us that his food is "a homemade take on pub food," simple classics that are neither frozen nor overly processed. Bond eagerly looked over the menu, admitting that he doesn't often get to eat this type of cooking, let alone on Charles Street. "[BHHB is] open seven days a week for breakfast, lunch and dinner," Bond explained as we settled in with glasses of Tyrrell's Lost Block pinot noir ($7). Though the commute to his home in Central Square is short, he added, "I don't get out of [Beacon Hill] very often."

Dressed in a coat and tie, he looked a little out of place in what is essentially a neighborhood tavern; he had just arrived from a seminar where one of the topics involved restaurants using Twitter. Does he have a Twitter account? "Not yet," he reported. "There are so many different perspectives on how to use it. It all depends on the kind of crowd you want to attract."

I had my eye on the fried pickles ($5), so to start we ordered a "bucket" (a small silver tin) of them. The hand-cut, crinkled chips were an addictive opener, with golden, lightly crisped edges, a hint of rosemary and a kick of chili heat from the accompanying spicy mayonnaise. Popping a few into his mouth, Bond confirmed, "Everyone loves pickles."

We had both decided to embrace the comfort food aspect of the restaurant. While not every dish seemed to have all of the locally sourced elements that we'd hoped for—at BHHB, Bond stays dedicated to local and organic ingredients—the concept of fresh, homemade food carried through, from the crunchy, cheesy chicken quesadillas ($9) to a petite bowl of mac and cheese ($8), the tiny noodles nestled in a sauce dotted with peas and salty bits of ham.

We turned our attention to the issue of food and sustainability. "One of the more difficult parts of this job is finding the right sources," Bond said, though he admits that it's also one of the aspects he enjoys the most. In between chef gigs—including stints at The Inn at Little Washington in Virginia, No. 9 Park and the now-closed Pava—Bond worked at both Formaggio Kitchen and Burdick Chocolates to develop his background knowledge.

Chocolate-chip cookies and ice cream

The Wyoming native recently took on a pig project when BHHB purchased two Mangalitsa, or woolly pigs, which are being raised at Verrill Farm in Concord. "Back in the day, you had lard pigs and fat pigs, but pretty much all pigs are raised for meat these days," he explained. "But the Mangalitsa is a lard pig with about four inches of fat. We're hoping to feature them at a dinner next spring."

With that we dove into our porcine entree of mustard-crusted pork loin ($17), a perfectly tender cut sitting atop garlic mashed potatoes and mustard greens. Our lobster roll ($15) was a compact pile of meat sparsely dressed with mayo on a split roll, but unfortunately the truffle-and-parmesan fries beside it were overwhelmingly oiled and flavored.

Before working our way toward dessert, Bond and I bounced between subjects including where he sources eggs (Pete & Jen's Backyard Birds in Concord), his favorite truffle oil (certified organic da Rosario) and his previous ambition to become a musician (set aside when he started cooking). But we put the conversation on hold to enjoy a finale of warm chocolate-chip cookies served over vanilla ice cream ($6).

"These remind me of Tollhouse cookies," he reflected, wiping chocolate off his nose. "Isn't that around here somewhere? I'd really like to get down there to check it out. It's a nice tribute to the whole local theme." ×××

CLASS ACTS

"The Spring Stylemakers Fashion Show" took place April 2 at Neiman Marcus in Natick. Individuals featured on Boldfacers.com, a weekly Web site dedicated to uncovering Boston's up-and-comers, selected favorite items to appear in the fashion show. Some 300 guests attended.

Commonwealth Shakespeare Company celebrated William Shakespeare's birthday at the Ritz-Carlton on April 25 with a gala dinner and auction. The theme was 1930s Miami, the setting for the company's production of "The Comedy of Errors," scheduled for Boston Common July 31-Aug. 16. More than 100 guests attended, and the event raised $32,000.

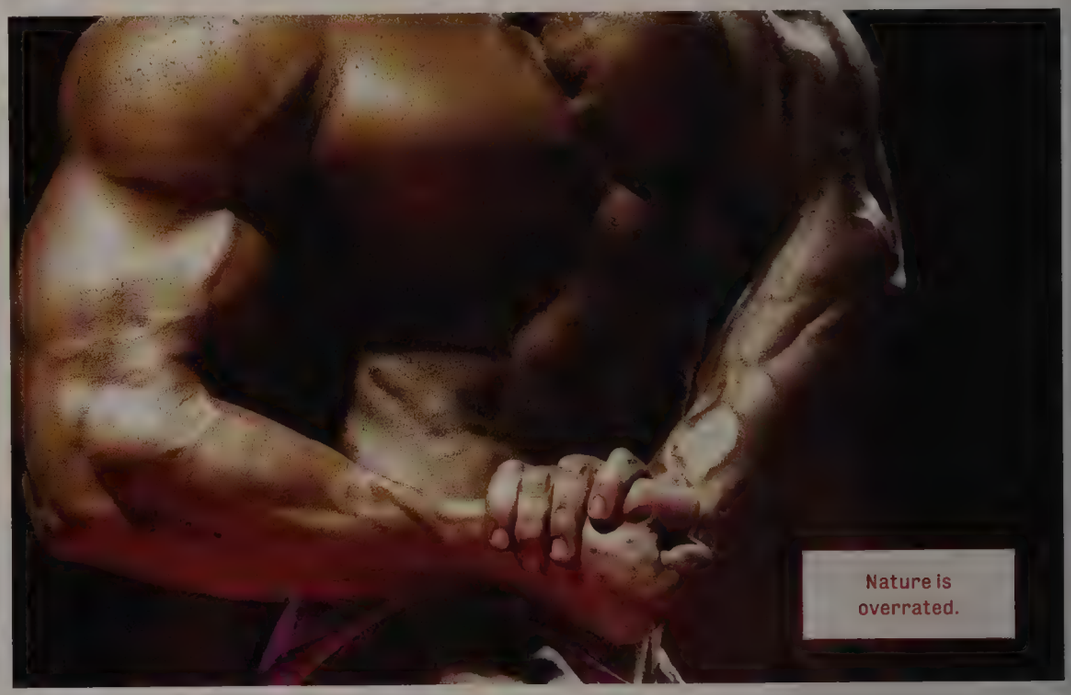
THE STRAIGHT DOPE

Society's hypocrisy about steroids must end.



SO MANNY RAMIREZ is on juice. I'm shocked. If a guy who wears baggy uniforms and hits .520 for the postseason can't be trusted, then I don't know who can. In fact, I think it's time we realized the steroids epidemic is a lot more widespread than previously thought. It's time to acknowledge that everyone is on steroids. Not just everyone in baseball. Everyone.

From Mark McGwire to Hulk Hogan, we have to rethink our heroes. Our society values performance, which is why we deify steroid-abusers like Sammy Sosa and Wolverine. We turn a blind eye, thrilled to see balls fly out of the park and villains ripped to shreds by a veiny weasel guy. But revelations are coming out every day, tainting the legacy of people we never would've suspected. For example, how do we rank Bode Miller's early career achievements now that Jägermeister and blondes have been found to contain steroids?

Athletes are the most high-profile cases, but when you apply a little critical perspective, you start to see the bigger picture. Recent studies have shown that a certain strain of growth hormone turns oxen blue, which immediately calls into question the achievements of Babe and casts suspicion on Paul Bunyan. Hefty Smurf may eventually be implicated.

Did you know that Big Bird, the Big Friendly Giant, the Jolly Green Giant and Clifford the Big Red Dog all had the same trainer? James's giant peach was reduced to an average-sized peach after rigorous testing standards were imposed in 2007. In testimony before Congress, Jack couldn't provide a satisfactory explanation for how his beanstalk grew to the sky, let alone why there was a giant at the top. Bamm-Bamm Rubble is shopping a book deal alleging that he shot up Popeye and Howard Huge at José Canseco's house. Arthur the Aardvark: not on steroids.

And this goes back further than the '90s, my friends. Historical anecdotes suggest that when George Washington crossed the Delaware, he was actually shirtless and flexing. He also exhibited prominent acne on his back and shoulders. God created the earth in seven days, but then his production tailed off suspiciously. And Thomas Edison: quite a few inventions, there, Thomas Edison, quite a few. What am I getting at? You tell me.

In retrospect, I've been in denial about the steroids epidemic since at least last Thanksgiving, when my mom pulled the turkey out of the oven and then overhead-pressed it for 30 reps. I knew she was up to something, because normally she's only good for 15.

It gets worse. The other day Heather was walking our dog who, seeing a cat, yanked so hard that he broke his new steel leash. Heather chased after him, and they both were pulled over for doing 45 in a 25. But they got off with a warning because the cop had to go take his steroids.

It's rumored that a U.S. governor has used steroids. To protect my source, I won't say which state. But you can probably guess who I'm talking about. OK, it's Bobby Jindal.

Steroids are taken in cycles, which is how Manny got caught—he tested positive for a hormone that users take when they're coming off a cycle. Well, you know what else comes in cycles? Hurricanes. Think about it. Things are quiet for most of the year, then all of a sudden boats are getting tossed onto I-95 by 150-mph winds and torrential rain. Classic 'roid rage. Notice that we got a quiet hurricane season as soon as Congress started asking tough questions? But I have no doubt that the weather will find a way to game the system and get back on the juice. And who's gonna call it out? Not the Weather Channel. And not you, either. Admit it. You hate hurricanes, but you love them.

I even suspect that someone's been sneaking me some steroids. I definitely haven't taken any myself, but I seem to notice a change in my writing. I'm pumping out 10,000 words a day and am on track to break all records in prose production for a season.

I'm beginning to think this could have something to do with that sports drink I get at the gym—it seemed kind of strange to take Gatorade intravenously, and also that the label actually said "Gatoroid."

But you listen to me—no, LISTEN TO ME!—if you were in my shoes, you'd do the same thing. If a needle was all that stood between you and a column, you'd take that edge any way you could get it. You want to put an asterisk on my numbers? Fine. But good luck finding an asterisk that's not on steroids. ✖✖✖

Boston sports teams achieve perfection on a very special day.

MOTHER'S DAY has always been special in my house (like everyone, I truly have the greatest mom in the world), but 2009 saw an added bonus. It was my wife Georgia's first as a mom since the addition of our beautiful Savannah. I'll remember the day as long as I live. I'll remember the night, too, for selfish reasons. It was one of the greatest sports days I can recall, with the Boston Celtics and Boston Bruins hanging on for their playoff lives and Josh Beckett going head-to-head with new Red Sox-killer Matt Garza.

Talk about anticipation! These kinds of developments are not a first for Mother's Day. Just two years ago at Fenway Park, with pink bats en vogue, we witnessed one of the greatest comebacks in recent Red Sox history. On that beautiful day, future "Hall of Famer" Jeremy Guthrie was twirling a gem, allowing only three hits over 8 1/3 innings of shutout baseball. The Sox trailed 5-0. They were two outs away from letting us get back to mom. But a dropped pop-up turned into an error, and then-Orioles manager Sam Perlozzo pulled out the dominant Guthrie. Next came the miracle, later named the Mother's Day Miracle, as Red Sox shortstop Julio Lugo's ground ball to the first baseman was thrown away and the Sox scored their fifth and sixth runs to finish off an unexpected win.

Mother's Day 2009 beat it.

For the third time in a week, all three teams—the Bruins, Celtics and Red Sox—played on the same day. As a sportscaster, it was a busy week. As a fan, it was pure adrenaline. Both the Bruins and the Celtics were coming down to virtual one-and-done status in their respective playoff series. Record-wise, the Red Sox were doing fine, but health-wise they were limping, with the American League's leading hitter, Kevin Youkilis, out for a full week.

Bruins head coach Claude Julien was disappointed with his team's perplexing slide. So was I. But Mother's Day was Redemption Day for the B's. They finally found themselves before it was too late. The big, bad Boston Bruins were the top seed in the East, and it took about fifteen minutes into the game to rediscover that fact. One huge hit from Milan Lucic woke up his teammates and the rest of us, and the Bruins never stopped. They won 4-0.

Next up, the Celtics. They were on a different course than the Bruins. Our expectations were gone with Kevin Garnett and Leon Powe on the shelf for good this season. We hoped for a Mother's Day win in Orlando, but we'd understand if it didn't go their way.

What was I thinking? As Celtics forward Paul Pierce appeared to be setting up for his final shot with the clock about to expire and the C's trailing 94-93, I was fine with him shooting. Then he passed the ball to Glen "Big Baby" Davis and I said, "What the hell is he doing? ... Yes! Yes! Yes!" Davis had his number called twice in the final 34 seconds, and his mama must have been proud because he didn't act like a baby. He was 100 percent man when he stuck a buzzer-beater for a one point Celtic win. If Mother's Day had ended right then, I would have slept with a smile.

But we weren't done. The Red Sox and the Rays were playing their rubber game while the other two were in playoff mode. But this rubber game felt like a playoff game, too. It was 3-3 in the eighth inning when Jason Bay continued his "Forget about Manny" campaign, this time hitting an RBI wall scraper in left, giving the Sox the lead. There has been no better hitter in baseball from the seventh inning onwards. Mr. Clutch, oh yeah!

Bay plays the game the way it's supposed to be played. He runs hard. He shuts his mouth. And he comes through when he's needed most. Of course, that would've been too simple of an end to this eventful day. We needed to go out in style.

Enter Jonathan Papelbon, excitement personified. While he's among league leaders as a closer, it hasn't been easy, and this night was Exhibit A. Before we knew it, a walk, an error (Papelbon's pickoff attempt went awry) and a single had men on first and third with nobody out. A perfect day and night appeared to be going by the boards. He wouldn't do that to us, would he?

Papelbon, somehow, struck out Carlos Pena, BJ Upton and Carl Crawford, all All-Star-caliber players, to complete the trifecta.

It wasn't just that our teams went 3-for-3. It was the quality of the victories. Each was perfect in its own right. I do have one selfish request, though. How can I order up one of these for Father's Day? ×××

ON MANNY, BIG BABY, SCOTT WALKER AND LOOCH

5 CELTICS OFF-SEASON PRIORITIES

Don't Get Baby Crazy Big Baby's game winner in Orlando was arguably the most memorable moment of the season, but it may have simultaneously dropped the curtain on the Ticket Stub's time in Boston. BBD's stock is at an all-time high, and he's earned the right to cash in, but the C's know better than to overpay for an undersized power forward with a sweet tooth.

Address the Posey Problem Yeah, we're still talking about it, but only because it's still a glaring issue. The "athletic swingman" free-agent pool isn't overflowing with options this summer, but a name like Matt Barnes or Trevor Ariza would sound a lot better than Tony Allen. Then again, so would any name aside from Mikki Moore.

Drain Tom's Brain The time has come for assistant coach Tom Thibodeau to leave the Ubuntu nest. And when he does, all he'll take with him is THE FOUNDATION OF BOSTON'S DEFENSE!?! OK, OK, calm down. Doc and the vets have the scheme down pat, but Danny Ainge needs to find a replacement who can teach and make adjustments like the great TT. Yeaaaah … sorry, Sam Cassell. We kinda meant a "better" replacement.

Push the "Little Three" With another season under their belts, either Gabe Pruitt, Bill Walker or J.R. Giddens needs to grow into next year's rotation. Our money's on Walker, and not only because he's the most talented—Pruitt might not even be around, and Giddens is far more entertaining as the NBA's flyest dressed cheerleader.

Map Out the Minutes Here's something the Celtics won't have to worry about next season: the No. 1 seed. That'll go to Cleveland, and might not necessarily be a bad thing. With the top spot out of reach, Boston will have only one goal: stay rested for the playoffs. Which makes more sense than "run Paul Pierce and Ray Allen ragged in March."

1 ONE HAPPY 21ST BIRTHDAY

To Bruins bruiser Milan Lucic, who turns the Big 2-1 on June 7. Now Looch can finally throw away that fake ID that he never had to use because he's Milan Lucic and will drink wherever he damn pleases!!

2 SOX THOUGHTS

Glory, Hallelujah! On May 20, David Ortiz hit his first homer of the season, and we celebrated like a Grammatica brother. That is, until we remembered: It's May 20 and we're celebrating Papi's first homer! Congrats, Big Fella, but don't stop now—only one more 'til you catch Jeff Bailey.

Take Five, Mike Now that Papi's on the road to recovery and Youk's beard is off the DL, we'd like to request a little R&R for Mike Lowell. Good God, Tito, hasn't he earned it?! (If you're looking for a temporary replacement, we had Lou pass along Wilton Veras' cell phone number. He's probably available.)

Ranking the Last 4 Playoff Exits

(NOW WITH CHEESY NEWSPAPER HEADERS!)

4) Hurricanes Storm Past B's The Bruins season might've met the most abrupt (if not totally shocking) end, but we're still ranking them fourth. Why? Because the B's will be back, and sometimes it takes the experience of a crushing playoff defeat to push a young team over the hump … or at least that's what we're telling ourselves.

3) Uh Oh, It's Magic If Orlando upsets the Cavs, then maybe that Game 7 loss takes on a new level of frustration, but if Cleveland cruises, you have to wonder: Were the C's better off waking up before their championship dream turned into a King James nightmare?

2) Red Sox De-RAY-led As humbling as it was, the pain of falling to Tampa was initially tempered by the belief that the Sox had lost to a team of destiny. And then the Rays went and choked it all away. Now all we're left with are "what-ifs" and the image of JD Drew's bat glued to his shoulder.

1) Tiebreaker Sacks the Pats That an 11-win team never got a shot at the title is still the biggest sports travesty of the year. It's only compounded by the fact that the injustice was followed by a deadly dose of Terrible Towel.

TAKE 5 BONUS TRACK

Five Questions with Lou Merloni

TAKE FIVE: You made headlines last month with your revelation that the Sox once brought a doctor in to speak to players about steroids: Were you surprised by how the story took off, and have you heard from any former teammates?

Lou Merloni: You know, I've had some discussions with guys. But as far as I'm concerned, that's in the past. People are taking what I said so many different ways. That the team taught players how to use … that they supplied them with steroids. But I never meant it like that.

We're setting this year's over/under on David Ortiz home runs at 15. What's your bet?

I'll still take the over. It's just a matter of hitting that first one. A slump like that can really take over your life, and I know David's focused on breaking out. So I want to give him the benefit of the doubt. He's earned that.

As a guy who's played some shortstop, what the hell is Julio Lugo doing wrong?

You have to understand that it's possible to get into fielding slumps just like you do with hitting, and the only way to break out of that is on the field. It was clear last year that Lugo never got comfortable defensively, and then he went and got hurt. Lugo's a guy who just hasn't played baseball in a while.

You expect the Yankees to still be in the race come September?

Only if they move Joba Chamberlain back to the bullpen. It's quite obvious to anyone who's watched them that the Yankees bullpen is just not good enough to win. And the crazy thing is, they've hardly had any injuries out there. This is what they actually planned to go with!

And how about the Sox? What needs to change for them to remain in the hunt?

The starting rotation, namely Lester and Beckett, need to get in the groove. After that, they have the luxury of one of the strongest bullpens in baseball. And they obviously have to stay healthy. That's a key. ×××

Framingham native and former Red Sox player Lou Merloni can be seen and heard on The Baseball Show*—Saturday mornings from 9-12 on Comcast SportsNet and WEEI.*

Soroff On HEATHER MITTS

The Boston Breakers' soccer star on her "sexiest" title, Man U and the value of hooligans.

BLONDE BOMBSHELL HEATHER MITTS, 31, is a defender for the Boston Breakers professional women's soccer team. A Cincinnati native, Mitts went to college in Florida, helping the Gators snag their first and only NCAA championship in 1999. She played for the U.S. National Team, winning her second gold medal at the 2008 Olympic Games in Beijing, where she started in all six games. From 2001 to 2003, she played for the WUSA Philadelphia Courage and was named an All-Star in 2003. During the 2005 season, Mitts worked as a sideline reporter covering college football for ESPN, and she has been a studio analyst for ABC, ESPN and ESPN2. She was named "sexiest player" in the WUSA by Playboy.com, was one of Philadelphia Magazine's "sexiest singles" and ESPN.com's sexiest female athlete. She was also the first soccer player ever to appear in FHM magazine. She is engaged to Philadelphia Eagles quarterback AJ Feeley.

Jonathan Soroff: So, you're a model who also plays soccer?
Heather Mitts: [Laughs.] Something like that. I've been really fortunate to do something that I love and to get a little bit of attention off the field, and it's been fun.

What's your take on all the "sexiest player," Sports Illustrated stuff?
I never thought I'd be in this position, and I'm enjoying every moment of it. I know I'm not getting any younger, so... [Laughs.] It's been a fun ride.

Coolest thing you can do with your feet?
Besides playing soccer? I actually kick open doors quite often. Very ladylike, no?

What one thing can you do that I can't?
Play 120 minutes in an Olympic final against one of the best teams in the world.

Is a sports bra a terrible thing to wear?
Well, it's just part of the uniform. After all these years, I don't even notice it.

Did you get any dates out of the Philadelphia Magazine "sexiest singles" issue?
My future husband. He asked me out because of it, and we were makin' out on the dance floor the next night.

So you're not a player?

PHOTOGRAPH BY KERRY BRETT

Would you ever pose naked?
No. I've been asked twice and declined. It's just the way I was brought up.

You were an ESPN reporter. Best thing you saw in the guy's locker room?
I never went. I preferred it that way. It would've been a little uncomfortable.

Were you a tomboy growing up?
Absolutely. I went to an all-girls high school, playing sports, and I can walk out of the house and not care what I look like. But at the same time, I like to dress up and look pretty.

You ran with the bulls in Pamplona. Was it a Hemingway-esque thrill, or a Japanese tourist-y disappointment?
It was one of the craziest things I've ever done. My girlfriend and I decided on a whim to do it the night before. Women typically don't run. So we're in this ring with all these men, and just before the bell rang, we looked at each other and said, "What the heck are we doing?" Then the bell rang, and we had no choice but to run, and it ended up being one of the coolest things I've ever done in my life.

AJ Feeley.

Oh, c'mon. A real superhero, not your fiancé.
OK, Wonder Woman.

David Beckham: overrated or hot?
Definitely option B.

Would you ever do an Armani underwear ad?
Never say never.

What would happen if you got stuck on an elevator with Posh Spice?
I think that would be hilarious. I think she's very interesting. The stuff that comes out of her mouth is hilarious, and I'd love to pick her brain. I'd try my best to make her laugh. I want to see those pearly whites up close.

Do you wish you'd grown up in a country where soccer is more popular?
Yes, I do. Whenever we go to foreign countries, I'm like, "Why can't it be like this in the United States?" But you've got to start somewhere, and hopefully, soccer will get there.

Pro football.

Chelsea United or Manchester United?
Man U. That's a tough one. They're two amazing teams, and you're either one or the other, but I have to say I've been watching Man U longer.

Do we need better soccer rivalries in the U.S.?
The pro league is brand new, and we haven't even played everyone yet, but there are huge rivalries for the U.S. national team. Brazil, hands down.

If we had soccer hooligans in this country, might it be a more popular sport?
Yes, because the media would love it. We'd get more attention, and any press is good press, right?

How often do you get a pedicure?
About once a month. That's one of my girly things. You can imagine that after a couple of matches, the feet aren't looking so sexy, so you've got to make sure you take care of them.

Are your feet insured?
[Laughs.] No. It's not like J-Lo's booty or anything.

Finish this sentence: "Soccer players do it..."
Hard.

Ooooh! So don't male soccer players have the nicest asses?
Umm, no. The nicest legs. But butts? Football players, for sure. ✖✖✖

Back to Nature

The outdoor, unclad visions of Arno Rafael Minkkinen

By Nick Altschuller
Photographs by Arno Minkkinen

"I think we may have a picture."

On a muddy patch of earth, just a few steps from his back porch, Arno Rafael Minkkinen peers through his viewfinder at a fallen tree. Cracked and hollowed by a rusted water pump, the rotted log lends gravity to the scene, but calling it picturesque would be a stretch. Sometimes a fallen tree can be a metaphor. Sometimes it's just firewood.

But the world Minkkinen sees through his camera has little to do with his photography. It's his intuition that led him to create works for MoMA and the MFA, and for galleries from Tokyo to Torino. His faith in chance, not his eye, earned him a Knighthood from the Republic of Finland. "There's something here that might possibly be OK," Minkkinen observes. I get the feeling he says this a lot.

Bowed by the wind, a length of the trunk hovers over pine needles, and Minkkinen ducks underneath to examine the other side. He sticks his hands inside and scoops out fistfuls of crumbling pulp. He presses his palms against the wood and tests his weight. He paces, scans and ducks back under to peer through a small opening, a porthole in the tree looking toward the house. He calculates the riddle and hypothesizes: "There will be a foot right here, which will be like an eye or whatever shape it might be."

Satisfied, he kicks off his sandals. He slides off his shirt and unbuckles the 34x34 jeans hanging loose from his hips. With his dark-framed glasses and thin mop of gray hair, Minkkinen ponders the hollow one last time, like a wizard in boxer briefs deciding on a spell. And then he hauls himself up and disappears.

"This was me."

Minkkinen has taken a book of Diane Arbus's work down from a shelf in the sunny living room of his Andover home. His finger rests on the 1962 image "Child with Toy Hand Grenade." A bony blond boy stares into the lens with wide, crazed eyes. The tendons in his arms are pulled tight, his right hand holding the toy, his left clawed in anger or frustration. His lips are clenched like he's fighting off a scream or beginning a growl. He looks like he's desperately trying, through some vengeful form of alchemy, to make the toy real.

"This is what I felt like when I moved to the States," Minkkinen explains, his lips thinly veiled by a moustache and beard. "People would make fun of you, and I had the double cleft palate."

Born in 1945 to a cavalryman and a nurse who met during the Finnish Winter War, Minkkinen came to Brooklyn at age 6 and settled in an area known as Finntown. Divided into quarters, the Minkkinens lived in the Norwegian section. Across the street was the Puerto Rican community. The nexus was a Jewish area, where Minkkinen went to school. The Finnish district is where he delivered papers.

At Wagner College, Minkkinen studied writing, and it wasn't until the early '70s that he became professionally interested in photography. (There had been playful moments with a Brownie movie camera before then, including experiments in angle and scale—elements that would become trademarks of his work.

He wades in the space before the lens, tethered like a deep-sea diver.

But it also documented a game of spin-the-bottle, minus frames he snipped away before the evidence got into the wrong hands.)

While searching the want ads for copy writing jobs, Minkkinen began shooting with his father's old Linhof Technika 4x5. At a chance interview with an ad company working with Minolta, the brand name suddenly transformed into a password. "They were desperate to hire somebody, and at the end of the interview, he just said to me, 'What do you know about photography?'" Minkkinen recalls. "So I said, 'I've been tinkering around with my father's Linhof.' And his eyes lit up. They never asked me anything more, and I was hired the next day. And two, three weeks later I was brought to Minolta headquarters in New York and introduced as the 'agency expert' in photography."

His job was to write ad copy—"What Happens Inside Your Mind Can Happen Inside a Camera" is a Minkkinen original—but the position came with a supply of bodies, lenses and other perks that helped push him toward his more visually creative leanings. "I loved the equipment," he says, in a tone that reveals the feeling hasn't faded. "I fell in love with the gadgetry and the smell of the box when you open it, and so there was just this surge of pictures. All I did that first year was make pictures of pictures I had seen in magazines."

This enthusiastic, perhaps derivative, outpouring motivated Minkkinen to apply to the Rhode Island School of Design for graduate studies in photography. Lacking original work to show to the admittance board, they rejected him. So in 1971, he signed up for a summer workshop, and he went to the Museum of Modern Art to study the photos of the woman who was to be his instructor, Diane Arbus.

Shortly before his workshop began, Arbus killed herself in a Manhattan hotel. "Nothing about me, but you know, it's just that coincidence, kinda like a handshake that never happens?" Minkkinen supposes wistfully.

Still inspired by Arbus, he took his first nude self-portrait that summer. In the image, a dirty mirror lies on a patch of tall grass. Minkkinen stands above, his face obscured by smudge and shadow. His arms hang slack by his sides. "I was attracted to the raw honesty of her images, and in a way it was a metaphor for that," he explains. "Nothing to hide. Here I am. I thought that would be the best way to begin. It was just a hunch that that would be a starting point."

Nearly 40 years later, Minkkinen is still working on what he says, "may well be the longest self-portrait in the history of photography." It's work that has seen him bound and suspended from a ski jump, hanging from the edges of cliffs and submerged in the waters of Fosters Pond behind his home. All while naked. The nude, human form is Minkkinen's leitmotif.

"He's an adventurer and an inventor," describes Newbury Street gallery owner Robert Klein. "He stands apart, in the history of art, as a person making these kinds of pictures."

It's dangerous work, so Minkkinen sticks to shooting his family in safer settings—an image of his wife, Sandra, his arms wrapped around her thighs, his face hidden by her waist; a photo of son Daniel as a baby at Minkkinen's feet, his legs bent from above, like trees giving shade—but normally it's just Minkkinen nude and alone in the wilderness.

"I was pretty shy to ask people to do a thing like that, and so it was more convenient at first," Minkkinen says of his solo adventures. "A couple of years later, I started making pictures where life held in the balance in some sense, and if something went wrong, you could kill yourself. And so I realized I had to photograph myself. There was no way to photograph anybody else.

"I have pictures, where if anyone was to see, they'd say, 'You're crazy, what are you doing?'" Minkkinen adds, sorting through giant prints of lakes and dunes in his home studio, a study in wood and white. "I rehearse in the motel or in the canyon, and then it's just mind over matter and don't look down. It's such a fantastic rush."

The result is work that's both organic and surreal. In one 1996 image shot at Fosters Pond, Minkkinen is buried beneath the snow, his entrance hidden. With pure body heat, his hands have pushed through the surface and stretch out, eager and angled, like spring flowers searching for sun.

They seem familiar in a sense. But there's a mystery to them that severs a direct connection and leaves the mind floating into the ethereal. As novelist and MIT physicist Alan Lightman wrote in Saga, a retrospective on Minkkinen's work: "Inhabiting these photographs, we shed earthly limitations. We transcend boundaries between water and sky, liquid and air ... All of our prior beliefs about the nature of our bodies and what they can do melt away. That is the real magic of Minkkinen's photographs."

It's a magic created by decades of counterintuitive image-making—moments of solitary masochism. He elongates the suspense of his craft, submerging himself in freezing rivers, or posing in shallow water, keeping his limbs motionless to prevent ripples from breaking the picture as he sees it in his mind—all for a frame he may not look at for weeks. He's done away with Polaroid tests. Rolls of negatives sit like Pandora's boxes in his basement, their secrets to be revealed only when Minkkinen finally chooses to switch on the red light.

"I started making pictures where life held in the balance, and if something went wrong, you could kill yourself."

"In about '84 or '85, I started shooting Polaroid quite regularly, about 10 years of that, then I put it away because I started to miss the excitement of not knowing," he recalls. "And taking the picture and hoping it would work, and facing the disappointment of coming back from Europe with ideas I have sketched in my notebook, and realizing it didn't work. It brought it to a purer process for me. The way it was in the beginning."

There's tempting fate, and then there's waving your naked butt in front of its jaws. Minkkinen's second technical quirk is working in front of his camera, not behind it. In his methodology, he creates a flat visual plane in his viewfinder, and then surveys that frame in three dimensions. With a cable release for the shutter in his hand, he wades in the space before the lens, tethered like a deep-sea diver, until it's time to hold his breath and squeeze. While most craftsmen rely on planning, Minkkinen and his camera merely set the stage, leaving the rest to intuition, chance and hope.

"I'm just not as smart as reality is," Minkkinen admits in his living room, where a print of his elephantine limbs roaming a wet landscape hangs on the wall behind him. "Reality creates these magical things. The reality of the water, the way it went. The way the branch bent when I was on it. The discovery of things. I'm so limited in my imagination, but the reality, it's a team effort. It's collaboration. I'm part of it, but the camera takes over."

What is created is a curious form of portraiture, like a twisted Johnny Appleseed roaming the countryside with a sack full of Minkkinen limbs. Sprouting from the ground or hanging in the air, flesh and earth intertwine in ways that seem abnormal, but that show the natural link between man and the wild. The bend of an arm and that of a river. The curvature of a stick and of a spine. City life tends to drive a wedge between these worlds, but Minkkinen's work shocks the mind into reestablishing that connection.

"It's finding forms with the human body that say it's part of the same thing," Minkkinen explains. "And ultimately where that leads is to find comfort with death, in my mind. That tree has fallen; it's been around a long, long time. There it is. It's not in the earth yet, but to me that's the religious answer to life. It's the natural cycles. We're a magical creation, however all that happened. And I see the same thing with the tree. That's the cycle of life."

In Minkkinen's basement is an annex filled with magazines from around the world that feature his work. Prints cover the walls. The shelves hold copies of his books, often multiple copies. In his upstairs studio are the brochures for his exhibit on a Celebrity Solstice cruise and at the Cavallo Point Lodge in Sausalito, Calif.

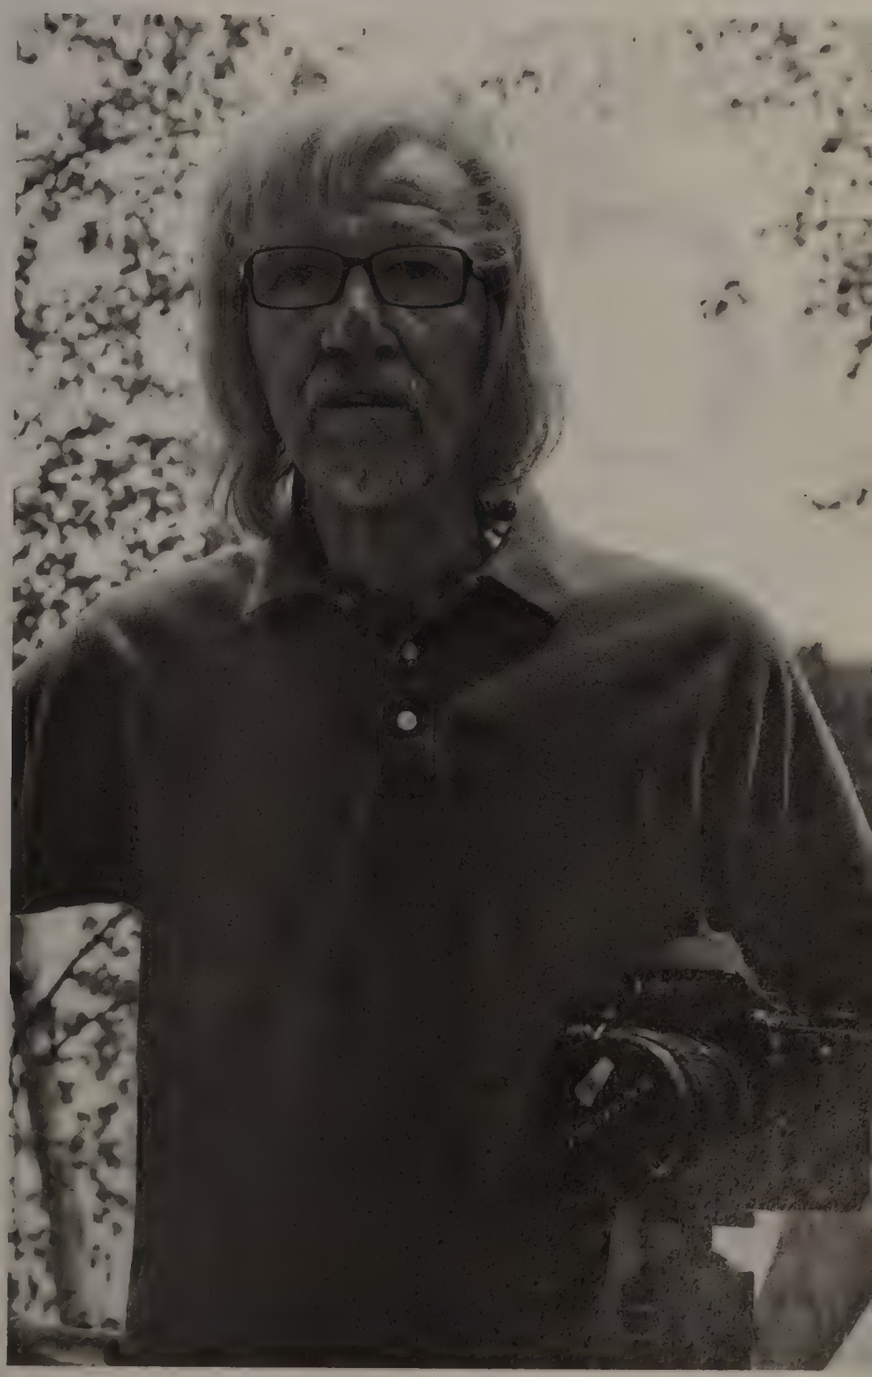
From the beginning, in those first days with his father's Linhof, Minkkinen has seemed just as concerned with permanence as art. "It must have been the environment, and me being in that point in my youthful life, at a panic point perhaps, that what am I going to do?" he recalls. "With an ad, as soon as the price changed or the features changed, nobody was interested anymore. Maybe it won an award, but so what? It didn't have longevity."

Like all of us, Minkkinen wants to be remembered. Wants to know that the ripples he makes will someday bounce back. "Hopefully it's not just a sensory, visual pleasure or delight or experience, but it reverberates into something lasting because of how it makes you feel," he explains.

Stark nudity helps, but the pleasures are also in his outdated methods. No digital cameras, no Photoshop, no double negatives. Just the raw basics he teaches in "History of Photography" as a professor at UMass Lowell. It's a tribute to his work that gallery visitors still walk up to his prints and assume computer manipulation, until they see a date from the 1970s on the detail card.

Then there's the legacy of the puzzles his images leave behind. How did he find that angle or create that shape? Like a magician, he tricks the eye but conceals the secret.

In 1995, a Finnish television crew shot a documentary on Minkkinen's life that included a scene showing how he walks on water. At a preview, the daughter of his Paris agent was seated in the audience and whispered in her mother's ear that she always imagined Minkkinen was standing on a crocodile. "And so I wrote to the director and said you gotta cut that scene," he recalls. "I don't want to kill the crocodile."



It's a memory close to the surface and a slogan he follows, the impulse embedded in his brain like the product of effective advertising. "I want to create a riddle that lasts, that has no answer," he says. And even in the quiet of his studio, within the woods of Fosters Pond, he's on guard.

"No one has been able to figure this one out," Minkkinen enthuses, pointing to another image of his legs gliding across liquid. "You have to understand how water works. A lot of it has to do with that." He points to an arching big toe, the skin just barely grazing the surface. "It doesn't really, but . . ."

And so the mysteries remain locked, and doubting Thomases around the world are given no clues to consider, just the image of a landscape that couldn't be, but somehow is.

Seeing is believing. To watch the concentration on his face and hear the gears of the camera crank a frame into place. To feel the stillness on Fosters Pond before the rapid beep of the timer and sudden snap of the shutter. The sky is gleaming, the air is warm and the smell of pine and dead leaves rises from the ground. But Minkkinen has created something different. His world is colder but alive with geometry. Burned onto the frame is a puzzle, a feeling and photograph meant to last more than a moment.

"When you look at the negative, it's all there, and that to me is where the legacy is going to be," Minkkinen states, adding, "If photography had been invented 1,000 years ago, it could have been made. If nature stays the same way it is now, and we don't mutate into something else, then that picture could be made 1,000 years from now. And so it has a timelessness." ✖✖✖

Tree's Company

By Michael Blanding Illustrations by Paul Hoppe

As I step off a six-story platform to careen at 30 miles an hour down a set of steel cables, I begin to understand Stockholm Syndrome or boiled frog. When conditioned by increments, totally insane things can become normal. Like violent, lurching drops from the top of a 60-foot tree.

Canopy tours are popular among adventure tourists in the rainforests of Central America. They're less often associated with New England. Here, though, at the Mount Washington Resort in the White Mountains of New Hampshire, I'd signed up for what I assumed was a nature walk in the upper heights of the tree canopy, with a couple of zip lines between the platforms. I was interested to see if there was anything going on up there that wasn't happening down on the ground—placid stuff about pinecones and blue jays.

I guess I should have read the fine print.

"The big difference between this and a roller coaster ride is you have a role to play," says our guide Steve, a chipper chap in a windbreaker and a climbing harness that looks like S&M gear designed by North Face. He goes on to say that while Mount Washington Resort doesn't have the only canopy tour in the Northeast, it has put others to shame since opening last fall. Taking more than three hours to complete, it's a web of 10 zip lines, some more than 800 feet long. And unlike some courses that automatically start and stop you, here you're expected to brake yourself. "You'll find out what to do if you don't make it across," Steve says. "Unclip?" someone offers. "You'll be 60 feet up," Steve replies, "so that's probably not a great idea."

Too little pressure, and we risk slamming into the tree on the other end, something Patrick calls a "negative fun experience."

In fact, we learn Steve and his partner, a bearded climbing guide named Patrick, will be doing all of the clipping and unclipping, ensuring we'll always have a safety line attached. That doesn't mean there isn't risk. "No one has broken any legs or anything," Steve assures us as we wait with a view of Mount Washington for our jeep to take us up the mountain. "We've just had a couple of really bad bumps and bruises. Those were people who just didn't listen to the instructions or were just so scared they couldn't hear us." Somehow I don't find that reassuring. I've never been afraid of heights per se, but I do have an above-average appreciation for staying on the ground.

After a bumpy jeep ride up the mountain, we walk down a muddy path sprinkled with fresh moose prints (and one big pile of moose scat) to the "baby zip" where we'll practice our technique at eight feet up. To brake, we're told, we simply put a gloved hand on the cable behind us, gently applying pressure until we stop. Too much, and we'll get stranded, having to pull ourselves back hand over hand along the line. Too little, and we risk slamming into the tree on the other end, something Patrick calls a "negative fun experience." As I clasp my hands over the trolley and put my whole weight on the line, I realize it's a good thing my wife and I decided to stop after two kids. Ignoring the crush of my testes, I let go and zoom down the cable. On my first try, I come to a stop about a foot short of Patrick's waiting arms.

There's little time to warm up on two short lines before the first big test, a 250-foot zip across a ravine with a mountain stream below. The woman in front of me has a habit of screaming whenever she steps off. I can see why. My navel bobs up into my throat like a bubble in a champagne glass, and it's only about halfway across that I realize I've stopped breathing; I barely even register the rocks and trees that go skating by a few dozen feet below. Again I brake too much and stop short, leaving Patrick to haul me up onto the platform.

The next zip is more than twice as long, hemmed in on both sides by trees. Whizzing down it, I feel like one of the spaceships in Battlestar Galactica, shooting down a launch tube, the line making a high-pitched "zhushing" sound. Up here in the trees, the platforms are connected by bridges of wood planks and cable that (to continue the geeky references) are like the Ewok village in Return of the Jedi. But with fewer awful musical numbers.

The tour's architects constructed the platforms to minimize the damage to the trees, gnarly 200-year-old hemlocks and ramrod-straight white pines, the kind of which were used to make masts for warships. As I acclimate to the experience, I find myself, cheesy as it sounds, gaining a new appreciation for the trees. From the ground, they seem to be unmovable, inanimate objects. Now, with three hours to contemplate their upper branches, I realize that our platforms and bridges are constantly moving back and forth as they bend and kiss in the breeze. I've never been so conscious of trees as living entities, or of the patience and strength they possess. Up here, they barely seem affected by steel cables sunk deep into their sides, peacefully bobbing and swaying at heights that set humans to screaming.

Case in point, the canopy temporarily ends as we reach the end of the second bridge to look across the highest and longest zip, nearly 1,000 feet across a ski trail cut into the side of the mountain. It's 160 feet down where the ground drops in the middle, three times as high as we are now. Far below us is the Ammonoosuc Valley. Across a mountainside, the platform we're heading toward seems impossibly far. "Oh my God, I am so fing high. Oh my God, I seem about as scary as my morning commute. Maybe it's just my harness cutting off my circulation, but the warm glow of elation spreads through my body. I figure this must be what heroin feels like. I start to think about other insane things that I've resisted because they seemed so unnatural, things like bungee-jumping, or learning German. On the following zip, I tuck into a cannonball, fighting the urge to let go and fly weightless through the sky. As I hit the platform, I'm grinning. The woman who comes in next exclaims, "So. Awesome." Yes. It is. ✖✖✖ so fing high. Oh my God, I am so fing high," I repeat over and over in my head—a phrase that I haven't uttered since late nights in college. My heart pounds and the Cubano I had for lunch feels ready to make a guest appearance on my harness.

As Patrick plummets into space, Steve warns us against turning our heads to look at the scenery, as it might cause our bodies to spin, ripping up our jacket or arm on the cables. It's then I realize how utterly insane this all is—and how the only way to get through it is not to think about what I'm doing. I take the leap, teeth gritting as I shoot through space, trying to catch little glimpses of the valley below and the mountains all around without hurtling into a death spin. I barely even notice as I glide right up to the platform with a minimum of braking.

The amazing thing about doing insane things is its ability to make doing slightly insane things so much easier. The next couple of zips, which would have seemed death-defying in the beginning,

SHOE DESIGNER JASON WEEKS' BICOASTAL STYLE

By Amanda Knorr Photographs by Kim Kennedy

After living in L.A. for 10 years, 35-year-old Jason Weeks returned to Boston to design for a division of the Adidas Group. These days his look reflects a California and Massachusetts state of mind. It's both casual and crisp—and a lot more complex than throwing an Ed Hardy T-shirt over some Nantucket reds.

Improper Bostonian: How would you describe your look?
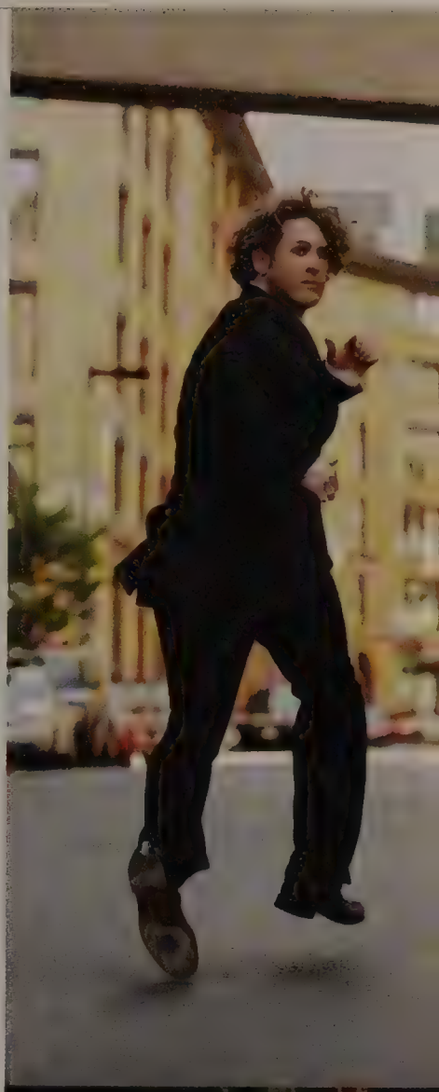
Jason Weeks: Rock 'n' roll casual, sporty bohemian, designer chic.

Places you shop in Boston?
Uniform, Motley, the Tannery, Louis Boston, G-Star Raw. Wherever I get inspiration. I don't have one particular place. It's sort of a random and spontaneous thing with me. Although I tend to shop more when I travel.

Favorite designer?
John Varvatos. When I purchased my now-vintage ensemble (trousers, coat and shoes) for my wedding, I was sold. The fit was perfection. I own several casual pieces from him that are spectacular!

I have to ask about footwear...
Any damn thing that's comfy and fits the outfit in warm times. Adidas and Reebok are obviously a given! Winter is a different story, since my adjustment has been a bit cumbersome through these dark cold times. I tend to go with any black boot that fits and has some unique quality.

Any other obsessions?
I love belts, scarves, wallets and watches. For the last two years, I've owned this fairly unique chain wallet. Recently, I purchased a couple of really cool Marc Jacobs wallets, one black reptile skin and the other white. When you find something you really like, buy two!

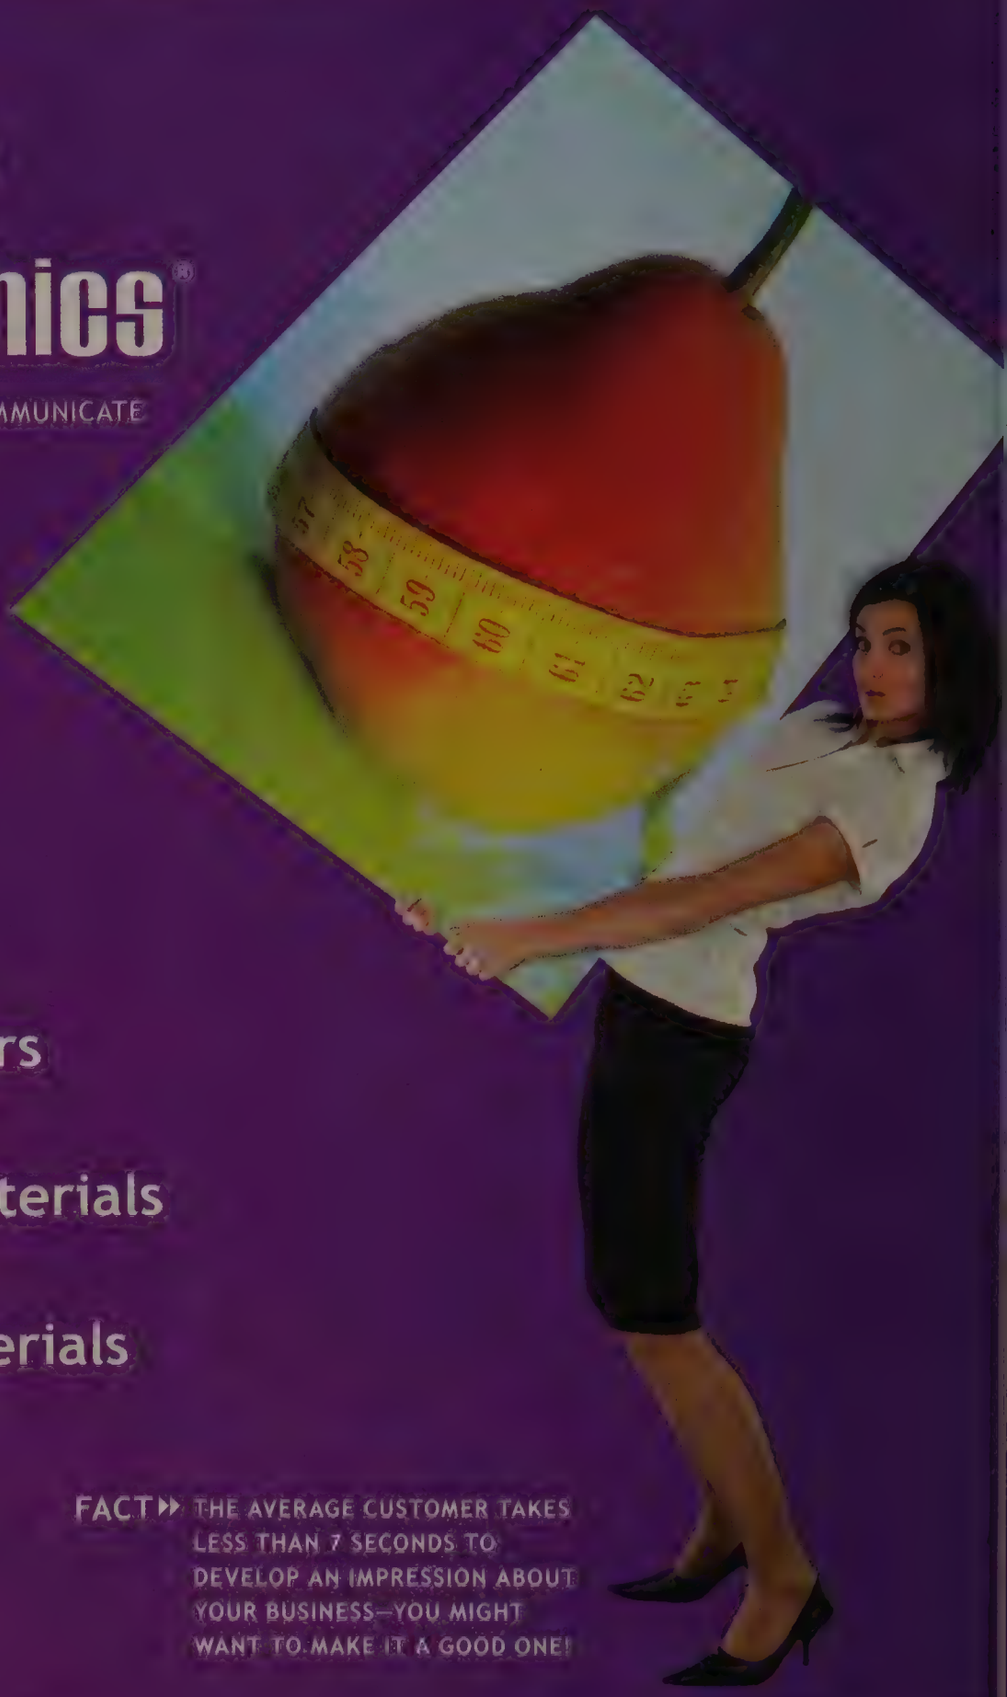


Go-to item on both coasts?
Always jeans! Dark ones especially. I'm really picky when it comes to denim. I try a lot on in hopes of a full-time commitment and that happens maybe once or twice a year. If I'm lucky, it's twice.

Was winter coat shopping a shock to your system?
Outerwear is so diverse and cool! I wish I had a piece for every moment, but I don't. I'll stick to my obscure random leather piece that I found in L.A. that's caramel-colored. It keeps me warm when it's really cold and is a great companion over a T-shirt.

How has your wardrobe changed since you moved?
For me, I guess the biggest change for my wardrobe was the combinations of things. More layering for sure. I also feel like the colors became toned down more—a bit more muted. January in Boston versus January in L.A. can be a difference of 80 degrees and sun, so I think that has an interesting effect.

Favorite part of dressing in L.A.?
There isn't a very good vintage scene here [in Boston]. In L.A. you can really score shopping in the secondhand scene.



Favorite part of dressing for Boston?
Buying things in terms of the seasons. I love the fall again. It's fun to get some scarfs, a new coat, boots, etc. Fashion is much more complex, interesting and fascinating when seasons are a factor. It becomes more diverse. I love it and missed it. ✖✖✖

Capsules by Sean Burns

Angels & Demons ★ Are these Dan Brown books as stupid as the movies they've spawned? I guess you can call Angels & Demons a step up from 2006's unspeakably turgid The Da Vinci Code, if only because it's more frantic and unhinged than that burnished, lethargic yak-fest. This boondoggle begins with a time bomb full of anti-matter (yes, kids, "anti-matter") stashed somewhere in Vatican City, and things only get more preposterous from there. Late game developments in this picture provoked peals of laughter the likes of which I've seldom heard at comedies. I daresay it's Ron Howard's funniest film since Splash. Tom Hanks reprises his role as surly Harvard symbologist Robert Langdon, with his charisma tamped down flatter than his unfortunate hairstyle. He wanders around pointing at statues and mumbling obscure art history footnotes while everyone else marvels at his intellectual prowess. Howard cranks up the Gregorian chant and keeps the lighting dim and the mood glum, but the material's inherent silliness throws the ponderous self-seriousness into sharp comic relief. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Coraline ★★★ Neil Gaiman's psychologically spiky novella gets a fairly faithful rendering from gifted stop-motion animator Henry Selick, who previously tickled eyeballs with his beloved The Nightmare Before Christmas and the terrific but underrated James and the Giant Peach. Voiced without much gusto by Dakota Fanning, our title lass is a neglected only child who happens upon a secret tunnel leading to an alternate universe where doppelgängers of her distracted parents are suddenly affectionate and doting. Of course, they do have buttons for eyes, but that's probably the least creepy thing about them. A psychedelic trip down a dark rabbit hole of youthful anxieties, Coraline is never less than a visual marvel, even when Gaiman's leaps of dream-logic become more head-scratching than mind-blowing. If you have the option, I'd check out the 3-D version, which wisely foregoes the usual gimmicky gotcha effects and instead uses the wondrous Real D technology to further envelop you in Selick's richly detailed, carefully rendered world. Also, it's nice to see a heroic cat, for a change. (In the suburbs.)

Duplicity ★★★ ½ Tony Gilroy's sophomore feature is so breezy with classic Hollywood charm, one might not even notice how cynical it is. Clive Owen stars as an MI6 sellout who ditched Her Majesty's secret service for a more lucrative career spying on frozen-pizza patent disputes. He's got a bad history with Julia Roberts' CIA bombshell, and Gilroy's film rather ingeniously eliminates any real-world stakes in setting these two working at cross-purposes for vainglorious lotion CEOs played by Tom Wilkinson and the amazing Paul Giamatti. Or are they up to something else entirely? Leapfrogging back and forth through time, Duplicity is a tricky, sophisticated affair that demands your undivided attention. The giddiness comes from the pleasure these actors take in Gilroy's dialogue, whether it's his rapid-fire banter or some juicy sidewinding monologues. Telling lies for a living takes a toll, and Duplicity asks: How do you love someone after you've discovered they're as full of crap as you are? (In the suburbs.)

Every Little Step ★ ½ Reality television's worst tendencies have been steadily creeping into theatrical documentaries. This puzzlingly acclaimed feature purports to part the curtains and take us backstage for the recent Broadway revival of A Chorus Line, but the movie trivializes the entire process, treating the production like the season finale of Dancing With The Stars. After a bit of early, intriguing archival footage chronicling the late-night improvisation sessions from which the late Michael Bennett culled the original 1975 production, Every Little Step pirouettes straight into the auditions. Veteran choreographer Bob Avian serves as a toothless Simon Cowell, overseeing an open casting call of more than 3,000 aspiring young talents, but still finding time to preen for the camera with maximum disingenuousness. Instead of exploring artistic decisions, the film focuses on shallow, puff-piece "profiles" of contestants—oops, I mean aspiring young professionals—and elimination rounds ensue. You'll be scanning the screen for phone numbers and instructions on how to vote for your favorites. (At Waltham Embassy and in the suburbs.)

Fast & Furious ★★★ Forget Brokeback Mountain. The best male love story of recent years was 2001's street-racing sleeper The Fast and the Furious, wherein Vin Diesel and Paul Walker ignored their girlfriends and made goo-goo eyes at one another while driving 120 mph. (There hadn't been such ■

OFF THE MARK

Strong performances buoy but can't save Bloom.

The Brothers Bloom
Starring Adrien Brody, Mark Ruffalo, Rachel Weisz, Rinko Kikuchi, Robbie Coltrane and Maximilian Schell. Written and directed by Rian Johnson. At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.

THERE'S A REASON SO MANY movies center on con games: viewers are natural born suckers. We walk into auditoriums as marks, ready and willing to accept pretty much any reality presented to us by the filmmakers. A movie theater is probably the only place you'll find folks eagerly anticipating being lied to and tricked. Unfortunately, most of the time we're just plain gypped.

Writer-director Rian Johnson's sophomore effort, The Brothers Bloom, can't really sustain itself for its entire running time. But the film at least earns credit for attempting to explore the grey areas between good storytelling and bad grifting, wondering aloud whether the right kind of lie can be helpful, even therapeutic.

Adrien Brody and Mark Ruffalo star as orphaned brothers

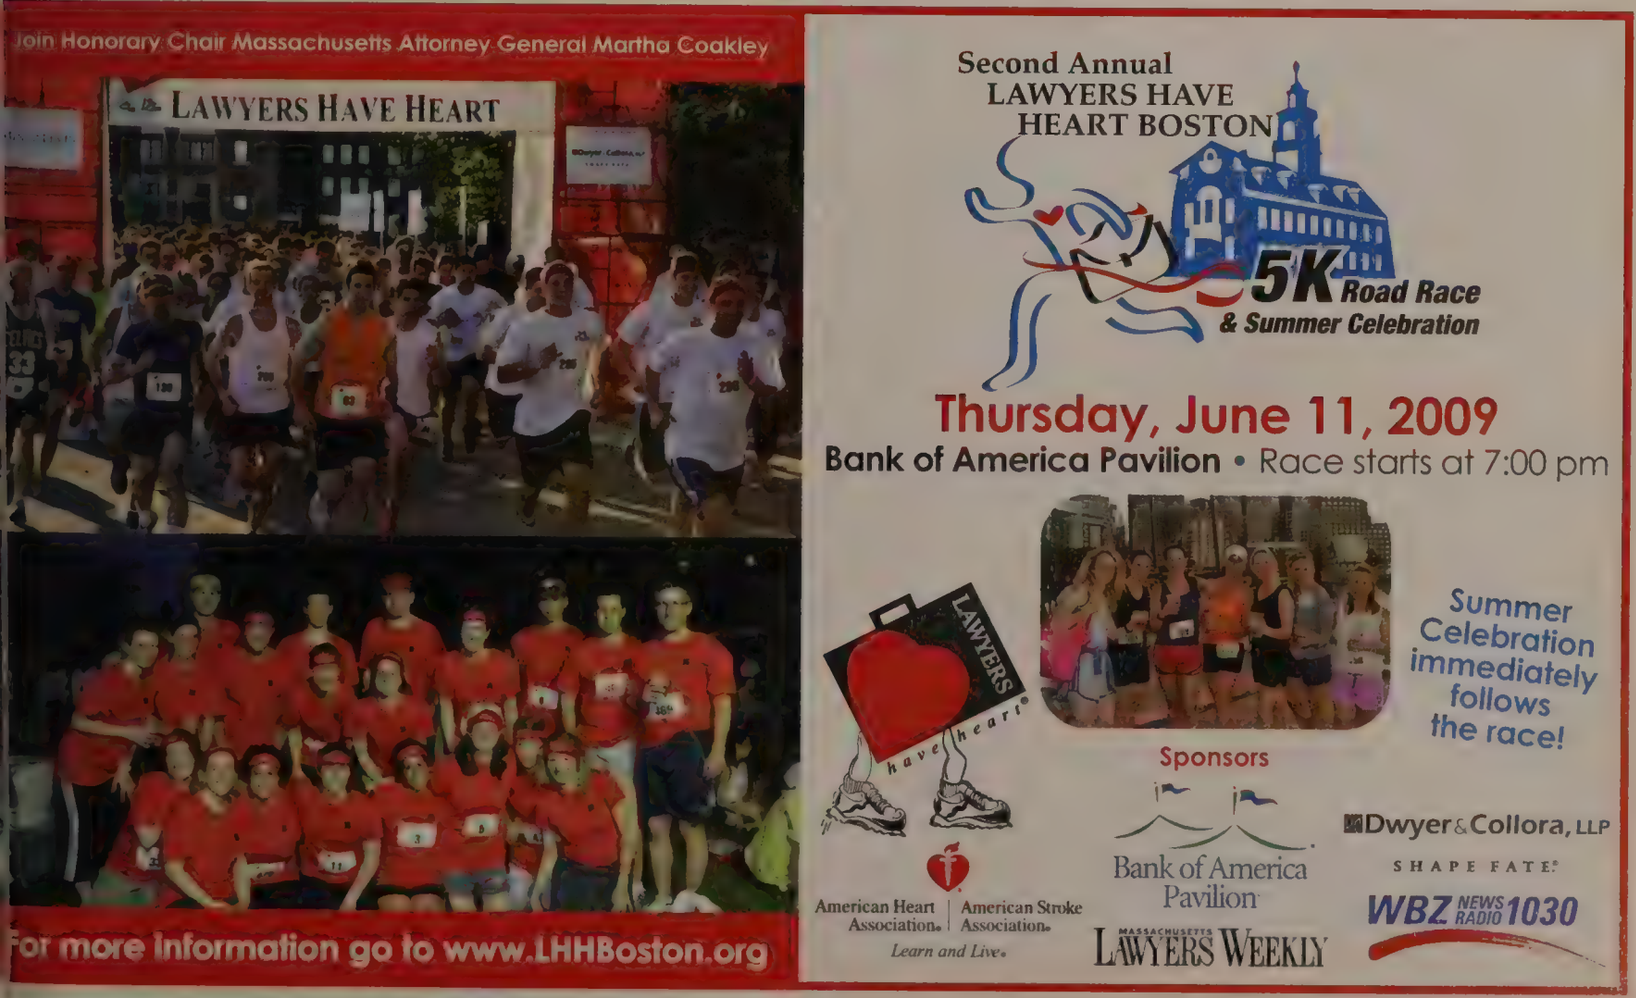
Bloom and Stephen. A dazzling prologue writes a check the rest of the movie can't cash, showcasing the siblings as they plot their first intricate con way back in grammar school. Narrated in droll fashion by actor-magician Ricky Jay, the sequence is a twisty little marvel, with the adolescent brothers outfitted in formal wear and natty fedoras, espousing a virtue the film keeps returning to: "In the best con, everybody gets what they want."

Cut to 20-odd years later, when the movie discovers these two sly devils at the top of their game, working elaborate, globe-trotting scenarios that have been plotted out to the letter by Ruffalo's slick Stephen. He sees himself as more of a novelist than a scam artist, delving deep into the biographies of his marks and peppering his cons with intricate illusions, symbolism and obscure literary references. Sad sack Bloom, played by Adrien Brody with a perhaps too-generous helping of self-pity, is growing weary of the game. Stephen's omniscient puppeteering has ground him down, and confessing his longing for "an unscripted life," Bloom would much prefer to drink himself to death in Montenegro then ever have to lie to folks again.

But in this kind of movie, there's always that fateful "one last job." Her name is Penelope Stamp, and she's a bored, shut-in billionaire who constantly crashes yellow Lamborghinis and "collects hobbies" as eccentric as chainsaw juggling. Seen through Stephen's eyes, Penelope is in desperate need of outdoor adventure, and depressed, drunken Bloom needs a reason to get off the sofa. Why not fabricate a tall tale about an overseas black-market antiquity to get everybody out of the house?

Unfortunately, Johnson is suffering from a fatal case of "the cutes."



The tension hinges on our never knowing if Stephen is truly on the level. Penelope, played with goofy exuberance and maximum adorability by Rachel Weisz, seems a little too quick on the draw to be just another mark, and Brody's Bloom is constantly plagued by worries that this entire venture is one of his brother's grandiose manipulations. Nabakov in-jokes are a troubling tip-off.

Ruffalo is a brilliant casting choice. His naturally cherubic face lends itself to the character's mock sincerity, always undercut by cunning, unknowable eyes. It's hard to fathom what kind of gene pool could produce both Ruffalo and the lanky, angular Brody, but the two actors have a relaxed rapport that suggests a lifetime of sibling rivalries.

Unfortunately, Johnson is suffering from a fatal case of "the cutes." His formidable debut, Brick, ingenuously applied the dialogue and plotting of 1940s' film noir to a contemporary high-school setting. Absurd as it may sound, the film was deathly serious, emotionally grounded and a genuine original.

Too much of The Brothers Bloom feels borrowed from other filmmakers. The script seems like something David Mamet might have written back before he calcified into self-parody. The snazzy costumes, snarky music cues, slow-motion interludes and widescreen compositions suggest that Johnson has been watching too many Wes Anderson movies. There's a thin line between skillful artifice and labored affectation. For a film so concerned with the space between illusion and reality, a more grounded, less whimsical approach would have sufficed.

But even while the movie overstays its welcome with a few too many twists, the central question lingers in your mind. A nifty thematic bookend to this spring's superior Duplicity, The Brothers Bloom asks us to consider whether sometimes a beautiful lie might be better than reality. As the whole point of going to the movies is to enjoy crafted lies, it's a notion worth pondering. ✖✖✖ gleefully homoerotic courtship in a blockbuster since Iceman snapped his teeth at Maverick in Top Gun.) Their careers in shambles, the original cast has reunited for the fourth installment of this guilty-pleasure franchise, which characteristically favors speed over logic and demonstrates a sly awareness of its own absurdity. Diesel's outlaw driver again teams up with Walker's undercover Fed, and they eye each other longingly while taking down a drug lord drag racing heroin shipments on the Mexican border. Deftly directed by Justin Lin, it's campy, turbo-charged nonsense. But how can you resist recurring shots of Diesel folding his Popeye arms in front of a towering, pumping oil rig. Paging Dr. Freud! (In the suburbs.)

Knowing ★ M. Night Shyamalan doesn't have to feel so ashamed anymore. Dopey even by the relaxed standards of Nicolas Cage movies, Alex Proyas' dunderheaded doomsday tale casts the over-actor as a grieving MIT professor prone to hysteria and fits of atheistic petulance. This presents a problem when his young son happens upon a 50-year-old piece of notebook paper containing numerical codes for every man-made or natural disaster from the past five decades, which leaves the boozed-up Dr. Nic to unlock the exact time and place of the impending apocalypse. Around the margins are a bunch of blond guys in trench coats looking like refugees from the 80s' band Wang Chung and attempting to abduct children for mysterious purposes. Knowing is ridiculous and offensive, smuggling a fear-mongering religious agenda into multiplexes beneath a veneer of CGI effects and disaster porn. Cage's comical caterwauling can only distract for so long, and the film eventually feels like the big-budget version of one of Kirk Cameron's Left Behind movies. (In the suburbs.)

The Limits of Control ★★ Ever since 1984's Stranger Than Paradise, writer-director Jim Jarmusch has turned out challenging, idiosyncratic and deeply personal pictures that tower over the mumbling-white-guy, romantic woes of our homogenized indie film scene. He's a national treasure, and The Limits of Control is his first stinker. Based on a short story that Jarmusch freely admits he never adapted into a proper screenplay, Limits is a prolonged homage to John Boorman's psychedelic 1967 masterpiece Point Blank, which starred Lee Marvin as a poker-faced avenging angel of death cutting a swath through the underworld in an impeccable suit. Here, the great Isaach de Bankolé stars as a mute hitman stoically drinking a lot of espresso in Madrid cafés while various indie all-stars (Tilda Swinton, Gael García Bernal, John Hurt) drop by to offer monologues on disappearing cultures, endangered art forms or whatever else happened to be on Jarmusch's mind that morning. Repetition is key, and if you're in the right mood, the cyclical, meditative groove might possibly be transporting. But most of the time it's an excruciating bore. (At Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.) bride struck by a meteorite, now horrified to find herself growing seven stories tall and quarantined in a secret government facility with a bunch of icky monsters. Once aliens attack, these outcasts become America's last line of defense. There's some very funny voice work by Hugh Laurie as the world's smartest cockroach, while Seth Rogen is typecast as an amorphous, dimwitted blob. As was bound to happen sooner or later, Stephen Colbert plays the president. See the IMAX 3-D presentation, which distracts from any screenwriting weaknesses with a healthy dose of eye candy. (In the suburbs.)

Monsters Vs. Aliens ★★★ Like a snarky little offshoot of Pixar's crew of bona fide artistes, DreamWorks Animation tends to specialize in pop-culture references and dated inside jokes aimed at the long-suffering parents in the audience. Its latest endeavor will never be confused with Wall-E, but at least it's a cohesive piece that boasts a charmingly 50s' retro sensibility and some dazzling 3-D effects. Reese Witherspoon voices an unlucky

The Soloist ★★ Robert Downey Jr. stars as L.A. Times columnist Steve Lopez, a motor-mouthed depressive who befriends a homeless, schizophrenic musical prodigy, played by Jamie Foxx. Lopez writes an inexplicably popular series of columns, congratulating himself for befriending Foxx's babbling musician. This scores him a book deal and some journalism awards, but poor Foxx is still out on the street, mumbling to himself and playing Beethoven on a broken violin. Susannah Grant's screenplay spends a moment or two wondering how much of this "friendship" is really opportunistic exploitation on Lopez's part, but the movie is too cowardly to stay there for very long. The Soloist moves about in a muddle, never quite sure of what story it's supposed to be telling. Flashbacks to Foxx's traumatic childhood and mental breakdown are interlaced with mundane details about Downey's broken marriage, until it becomes one of those movies where the minority figure's tragic fall is just another way for the callous white guy to learn important life lessons. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Star Trek ★★★ ½ What a wonderful surprise. It takes serious gall to recast characters as iconic as Captain Kirk and Mr. Spock with fresh-faced barely-knowns. Sure, there's a shiny coat of CGI paint and everybody's impossibly good-looking, but director J.J. Abrams has captured the upbeat sense of adventure that defined Gene Roddenberry's original 1960s' series. More so than any Trek project in decades, this one captures the camaraderie, the easy humor and, most important, the swagger that we associate with the headstrong Kirk and his logical, pointy-eared pal. Much like Casino Royale, Abrams' Star Trek finds ingenious ways to serve up familiar pleasures. Rare for a landscape dominated by dour popcorn blockbusters, this one isn't afraid to be fun. All the phaser battles, sexy green girls and transporter beam antics you'd expect are present, just with slightly unexpected spins. The film's rousing finale ends with the Enterprise crew at last assembled and warping off to what we can only hope will be a happy series of sequels. May they live long and prosper. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

State of Play ★★ ½ Russell Crowe's goofy, game performance is the best reason to see this so-so Beltway thriller, which was awkwardly condensed from a six-hour BBC miniseries by director Kevin Macdonald. Crowe stars as a scruffy, hard-drinking reporter for a struggling D.C. daily, and he has a grand time selling the more preposterous aspects of the picture. It seems the mistress of Ben Affleck's rising-star congressman committed suicide, or was she perhaps murdered by a Blackwater-esque corporation Affleck's investigating? The film cruises along at an agreeable pace, piling on a few unsurprising plot twists and developments with the brisk efficiency of an airport paperback. Will anybody really wonder if this mess is going to somehow involve that homeless guy we saw executed over a mysterious briefcase during the opening credits? Or what about when an actor as famous as Jeff Daniels is hanging around in background without much to do for an hour? Do you think he might be involved? (At Boston Common, Waltham Embassy and in the suburbs.)

Sugar ★★★ ½ Gorgeous and understated, the latest film from Half Nelson writer/directors Anna Boden and Ryan Fleck follows Miguel "Sugar" Santos (Algenis Perez Soto), a promising pitcher from the Dominican Republic who finds himself ground in the gears of Major League Baseball's recruiting system. Avoiding what we've come to expect from a typical sports movie, Sugar has no interest in clichéd climaxes like a ninth-inning strikeout. It's a film about the day-to-day mechanics of a sports industry and what it feels like to be an outsider in America. With a tenuous grasp on the English language, Sugar and his teammates find themselves dropped in a small baseball-crazy town in Iowa, and the inevitable culture clash is rendered with uncommon sensitivity. In fact, my one quibble with Sugar is that the film may be a bit too sensitive. This is such a gentle, compassionate picture, a little crassness may have given it more dramatic punch. But how often does one complain that a movie is too thoughtful? (At Kendall Square.)

Sunshine Cleaning ★★ Misleadingly sold as a wacky romp from the people who brought you Little Miss Sunshine, director Christine Jeffs' latest is a muted, melancholy affair with strong performances from Amy Adams and Emily Blunt. The two play depressingly dysfunctional sisters who start their own crime-scene cleanup business as a way to stave off poverty. At least for a little while, the movie boasts a plainspoken sadness and a poignant sense of day-to-day drudgery. But first-timer Megan Holley's screenplay isn't content to leave well enough alone, piling on predictable late-movie revelations and a rash of melodramatic contrivances that only serve to undercut the acting. The great Alan Arkin phones this one in by recycling his goofy grandpa shtick to diminishing returns. He belongs in a different movie, one that's taking place hundreds of miles away from Adams' sorrowful smile. Sunshine Cleaning's patently false, upbeat ending feels not just like a cheat, but a betrayal. (In the suburbs.)

X-Men Origins: Wolverine ★ After an acrimonious split with series director Bryan Singer following 2003's nifty X2: X-Men United, 20th Century Fox seemed lost on how to proceed with their superhero franchise. First X3: The Last Stand scrapped Singer's carefully developed allegories of alienation and killed off the most interesting characters, and now Wolverine seeks to demystify the tragic history of Hugh Jackman's cigar-chomping scene-stealer. As far as revelations go, the movie doesn't offer much that wasn't already covered in X2. The only surprises here are the dour mood, shoddy special effects and complete absence of levity. Directed by Gavin Hood, who recently helmed the rancid war on terror melodrama Rendition, Wolverine takes itself remarkably seriously for a movie about a man with knives coming out of his knuckles. It's a somber affair, and Jackman is forced to tamp down the character's roguish Han Solo charms in favor of a lot of brooding, scowling and howling upward into clichéd overhead shots. No more of these, please. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

GO FOR BAROQUE

The Decemberists amp up high concept with The Hazards of Love.

The Decemberists play the Bank of America Pavilion June 9 and the Newport Folk Festival Aug. 1.

TALK ABOUT POTENTIAL hazards. That's what you get with a folk-rock opera that nods to prog-metal muscle and British folk mythology for a tale about a maiden, her shape-shifting lover, a jealous forest queen and a villainous rake. It isn't the most digestible fare.

But that's what the Decemberists hatched with The Hazards of Love, a CD-length song cycle that the band will perform in its entirety at the Bank of America Pavilion June 9.

"I don't think anyone had an illusion that people were going to wrap their arms around us for doing this," drummer John Moen says of the ambitious concept album, noting that when songwriter Colin Meloy pitched it as a musical to producers of "Spring Awakening," they deemed it impossible to stage. "Not that it's that crazy. People have done this before."

Indeed, going back to the '70s, bands from the Who to Pink Floyd scored fantastical full-blown narratives. Others have followed in years since, and anyone who has paid attention to the arc of the Decemberists shouldn't be surprised.

Formed nine years ago in Portland, Oregon, the quintet became known for baroque folk-pop that hinges on singer-guitarist Meloy's flowery, arcane lyrics about mariners, legionnaires and military wives. But along the way, the band also has dabbled at length in prog-rock form. Consider 2004's heavy, 18-minute The Tain (based on an Irish epic) and the 2006 masterpiece The Crane Wife, which took an ancient Japanese folk tale as a starting point, included two three-part suites and sold nearly 300,000 copies.

"You're never going to predict what the marketplace needs from you," says Moen, who joined the Decemberists in 2005 after working with Stephen Malkmus and Elliott Smith.

For the Decemberists, The Hazards of Love marks both an extension and a refinement of the band's adventurous streak, boosted by the presence of the Diamond girls—two guest singers from coincidently named indie-rock outfits. While Meloy sings the roles of the Rake and the lover William, Lavender Diamond's Becky Stark voices the maiden Margaret, and My Brightest Diamond's Shara Worden channels the queen.

Two mid-disc tracks juxtapose the extremes of both the CD and the singers. Stark's whimsical soprano dances around keyboardist Jenny Conlee's accordion and guitarist Chris Funk's pedal steel in "Isn't It a Lovely Night?" Then, in "The Wanting Comes in Waves/Repaid," the duskier, opera-trained Worden wails over the lurching electric guitar riffs that snake through the CD as a recurring element.

Both singers have since joined the band for TV appearances and the full live debut of The Hazards of Love at the South by Southwest music conference, and they'll remain aboard through the summer tour. "Both Shara and Becky are so well cast, they end up exuding more of a character than Colin does as he sings his parts," Moen says. "Shara especially, when she steps up to do the evil queen parts onstage, you kind of feel like she's living it—in a good way."

Funk, who appeared on The Colbert Report for a 2006 guitar ShredDown where he was beat by ringer Peter Frampton, also gets to flex his chops—as do Meloy, Conlee, Moen and bassist Nate Query.

"It really is fun on this go-around to have the big, sludgy moments, so everyone's enjoying playing that, just to add a bit of texture," Moen says from his Portland home. "But a lot of my favorite Decemberists songs are ones where there aren't any drums. I really like that song 'Eli the Barrow Boy' from Picaresque and I don't even get to play on it!"

Moen makes up for it on numbers from The Hazards of Love, including the single "The Rake's Song," where he's joined by other members of the group to flesh out its percussive backbone. "It's kind of the world's weirdest single," he muses. "The character is talking about murdering his children, which doesn't follow in my head."

The Decemberists also aim to mix things up at the Newport Folk Festival, where they're slated for an Aug. 1 bill with Fleet Foxes and Pete Seeger, who just celebrated his 90th birthday. "We were told we might get to sing around the mike with him at the end," Moen says. "So it's a mind-blower."

And how might the band top its mind-blowing latest opus? "You can get bogged down trying to do that all the time," he says. "Anything that anyone has been talking about lately for the next record is doing something very simple." ✖✖✖

Out of Hibernation Brooklyn foursome Grizzly Bear is no stranger to Boston. Their sold-out performance at the Museum of Fine Arts' Courtyard last summer showed indie-folk rock at its best. Often compared to bands like Pink Floyd and the Beach Boys, Grizzly Bear experiments with odd melodies, whispered harmonies and an array of musical instruments like xylophone and flute. Veckatimest, the band's recently released third album, is expected to follow the success of Yellow House, their 2006 instant classic. The new record's first single, "Two Weeks," received rave reviews from music bloggers as soon as it was available on iTunes. Grizzly Bear's multi-instrumentalists return to Boston June 3 for another summer concert, this time at the Berklee Performance Center. Thais Collins

Spin Art

Swing Trance

There's something about the smell of livestock and fried dough. And taking a spin on the ferris wheel with your first crush when the carnival comes to town. Photographer Meg Birnbaum was so moved by such memories that she visited 14 regional fairs in New England, capturing specific moments with a simple plastic camera and black-and-white film. Relive your youth with her Corn Dogs and Blue Ribbons exhibit at the Griffin Museum of Photography through June 21.

If I Only had a Pulitzer

The slow and painful death of the daily newspaper isn't the only murder covered in Michael Connelly's newest novel, The Scarecrow. When a seasoned journalist learns he's about to get canned for a cheaper rookie, he decides to go out with a huge story about a young drug dealer who falsely confessed to murder. But what price will he pay to pull in a Pulitzer? Find out if he'll be collecting unemployment checks from the LA Times or pushing daisies in the end. Connelly presents his book at Borders Downtown Crossing on May 28 at 1 pm.

IMPROPER Sightings!

ATTENTION, BOUNTY HUNTERS! BONUS POINTS TO ANYONE WHO CAN CAPTURE AN IMPROPER READER WEARING A BRETT FAVRE VIKINGS SHIRT AT THE GREAT WISCONSIN CHEESE FESTIVAL HELD JUNE 5–7 IN LITTLE CHUTE, WIS.

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip. Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.

While in Trinidad, Dru and Afiesha Balgobin grabbed lunch at Uncle Sam's Shark and Bake. It's a great place to make a good chum.

Robert Bussey (right) and friends visited South Africa's Oprah Winfrey Leadership Academy for Girls. A wonderful school, if only Oprah didn't glue her photo to the cover of every textbook.

Ceileigh and Kieran Rodway dried off with THE IMPROPER in Emerald Isle, North Carolina. They love our magazine, and that's only partly due to the fact that they can't read.

Whoa! Wait a second! The economy's tough, but nobody's looking to pull the plug! So thanks, Dr. Jack Kevorkian... but no thanks.

Not Your Daddy's Gala...

If a black-tie ball for the Handel and Haydn Society (the oldest performing arts organization in the Western hemisphere, by the way) sounds a bit boring or stiff, consider this: By the end of the evening, there were two gay couples grinding on the dance floor to a cover of "Rehab" (performed, amusingly enough, by Boston's high society band, the Bo Winiker Orchestra).

The hootenanny, held in the ballroom of the Mandarin Oriental, was to honor trustee Debbie First, who was squired by her taller half, Bob; those on hand to fete her included bearded maestro Sir Roger Norrington, footwear heir Miles Slosberg with his son, Tom, and daughter, Jessica Benjamin (who paid me to kiss her and her cousin, Claudia, when we were 7), the stunning Alli Achtmeyer and the ever-affable Bill, cupcake cutie Courtney Forrester and her husband, Mike (who paid me to kiss him that night), and lots of equally sparkly others.

The evening's most amusing comment: the raffle prizes came in boxes with confetti, which prompted one guest to exclaim, "Confetti falling out of a box? Usually, you have to go to Bangkok to see that."

Oops!

The Theater Offensive unfortunately lived up to its name with an hour-long clusterf of a line to get into the Big Apple Circus tent for its Climacts! fundraiser.

Once inside, the wait was made up for somewhat with a performance by Dresden Dolls front-woman Amanda Palmer and a pair of smoking-hot twin acrobats, as well as cocktails (once you could get to the bar). On the other hand, there was the live auction, which prompted one guest to say, "Is he really shushing me? No one's shushed me since kindergarten!"

On the plus side, there was the opportunity to raise money for a worthwhile cause (LGBT theater) and to mingle with the primarily gay likes of condom mogul Davin Wedel and the huggable David Paul, supreme diva Christopher Fijal, the debonair Steve Avruch, natural blonde Gary Croteau and his Brasilian boyfriend, Gorgeous George, and Huntington theater head cheese Peter DuBois.

Meanwhile, the evening's most amusing remarks took place in the aforementioned line.

A sword swallower came out to entertain the crowd, prompting one man to say, "There isn't a guy here who can't do that," while another pair had the following exchange:

"Gays don't do lines."

"At least not well."

"Depends what kind."

"That's true. On a coffee table? Yes. On City Hall Plaza? No."

Don't Quit Your Day Jobs...

Banned in Boston is a bit like someone took the newspaper, shredded it and glued the characters back into the wrong stories:

Deval Patrick as Barack Obama, Mayor Menino as Abe Lincoln, and Aerosmith's Tom Hamilton impersonating Queen Elizabeth and singing the parody "I Kissed Michelle and I Liked It."

A musical revue to raise money for Urban Improv, it was held at the House of Blues and attracted a diverse crowd that included the likes of blonde goddess April Soderstrom, Chestnut Hill party pair Charlie and Betsy Gifford, the delightful Michael and Evelyn Treacy, Cantabrigian best-seller Mameve Medwed and one person who said, "If they close the bar during the performance, I might just kill myself."

But there were no suicides, the show was hilarious, and while the bar did close during the show, some of us still managed to make the next morning look ugly.

Walk on the Wild Side...

Boston got a serious dose of legit New York hipster cred when the Institute of Contemporary Art hosted an evening with legendary rocker Lou Reed and his wife, multi-media downtown darling Laurie Anderson.

The party started with cocktails and sushi in the Shepard Fairey exhibit, where the chosen few got to mingle with the likes of co-chairs Ofer and Shelly Nemirovsky and Tristan and Martin Mannion, über-philanthropist Barbara Lee and her supercool son, Zack, interior designer Fotene DeMoulas, white-hot architects Elizabeth Diller and Ricardo Scofidio (named two of Time magazine's 100 most influential people), and New York glamazon Lisa Schiff.

Following the performance, everyone gathered outdoors for more cocktails and schmoozing, where the following exchange took place:

"I have a gala every fing night this month."

"Well, thank God your father's a liver specialist." xxx

A Taste of What's Ahead

I can barely find time to eat these days, let alone sit through a long meal. And yet, restaurants retain their appeal. Especially since my own concoctions have gone south. I spent a recent night picking balsamic reduction out of my molars due to a forgotten pan on the stove. (Someone else needed dinner—immediately.) But it's not just the baby; I'm burnt out.

Lucky for me, a new generation of Boston chefs wants to make food that's both interesting and accessible. Cover girl Cassie Kyriakides Piuma and her peers are shaking things up in top kitchens around town. Perhaps unsurprisingly, many of them share the same mentors. In fact, the whole culinary world quickly feels connected in this city. Check out our guide to restaurant relations for the scoop.

Lydia Shire alone has spawned several talents. Jonathan Soroff catches up with the gastronomic grande dame in an interview that covers her love of steak, butter and other fatty fare. I, for one, applaud her defense of salt. It really does make everything—fancy or fuss-free—taste better.

Brew Meister That BREW MASTER

GIVEN THAT the financial pages read more like the obituaries nowadays, it takes dogged optimism to start a business, particularly one as chancy as a restaurant. But Jared Mancini, owner of the new Sip Cafe in Post Office Square, is too deep in sandwich meats to indulge in fatalism.

"A few people have said, 'Wow! What a time to take the plunge,'" laughs Mancini, 34. "But it was time."

Long a manager of other people's coffee shops (Torrefazione Italia, Starbucks), Mancini's foray into proprietorship began in April when he opened his own European-style cafe.

"I had been working on this eternal business plan," says the professed espresso fanatic. "The idea was to do something really fresh and simple at competitive prices." When a Post Office Square space opened up, Mancini seized the chance to turn his dream into a bank pitch. "Once they knew you were a brand-new business, 75 percent [of banks] said no." But enough said yes for him to start picking out coffee roasters.

At first, he had some missteps—a befuddled concrete contractor, the realization that you can't charge Newbury Street prices in the Financial District—but he's now seeing repeat customers. The summer is boosting gelato sales. And his catering service is about to launch.

"This sort of time weeds out the mediocre places," Mancini says. "[We're] not recession-proof, but it's not like we're selling $30,000 cars here."

ANDREW RIMAS

Drink of the Moment

Down Cold

Harvest manager Eric Cross keeps an array of house-made liqueurs behind the bar, now highlighted in a frozen triptych. "You can try a variety without having to have three or four different cocktails," he explains. Which is good, because drunk or dry, the Ice Flight ($12) can be a slippery proposition.

Ice is the new frontier in mixology, as more bars use slow-melting blocks for Scotches or slush for smashes. Aiming to take things a step further, Cross turns it into flavoring, like cubes of rooibus tea in the "Fountain of Youth?" ($10). For his flight, he showcases his liqueurs in ice shot glasses.

There's a rich blueberry brandy, a light strawberry tequila and a well-balanced limoncello—refreshing like a Del's lemonade but creating an adult buzz rather than a kiddie sugar high. Flavors change with the season and with Cross' sparks of inspiration. "It's great working at a place that's seasonal, because I can go into the walk-in and say, 'I guess it's quince season,'" he enthuses.

Cross has invented Valentine's cocktails that float sodium alginate bubbles of strawberries and cream in Champagne. He's experimenting with a bacon-and-egg flip. And this cascade of ideas will find its way into the flights, be it porcini and gin, fennel and rye, or peanut-butter–infused rum. "To me, berries and summer is the best," Cross opines, before another idea surfaces. "But I can't wait for watermelons to come into season." NICK ALTSCHULLER

He hails from a Wyoming ranching family and trained extensively in France, but executive chef Jason Bond has a real knack for fresh pasta (working for Barbara Lynch couldn't have hurt). For his current menu at Beacon Hill Bistro—which is refreshingly unstuffy for a hotel dining room—Bond rolls out three different noodle dishes, the best being his recently reinvented tagliatelle appetizer. Here, French technique meets Portuguese carne de porco à Alentejana meets spring in Massachusetts in a tangle of eggy ribbons studded with a handful of Woodbury littlenecks, juicy pork pats, wilted ramps and grassy, garlicky pistou. ELIZABETH BOMZE

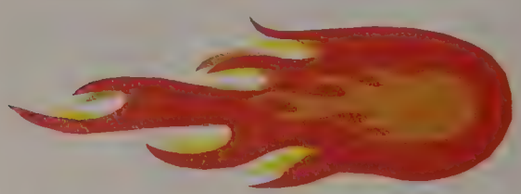
GOOD TO THE LAST DROP

"We kept the best of what was here," bar owner Doug Bacon explains. And what was here, in a below-grade space on Marlborough Street, was the Last Drop, a pub not lacking in charm but saddled with the wrong identity. "We tend to be known as a last-call place," says Bacon, who probably perpetuated the issue with the name. "I hope to keep that, but I want to serve the people that live in the neighborhood during evening hours."



So Bacon shut his bar down for a five-month spit shine. The Golden Tee and the dartboard are gone. Extra seats fill out the space. There's a wine fridge, single malts and the mundane, ubiquitous taps have been unscrewed in favor of beers like Anchor Steam and Allagash White. Reopened as the Corner Tavern, it's a spot that embraces a new neighborhood identity while retaining the feel of a private hideaway.

The biggest upgrade is the food—in that it's now actually served. There used to be steam-table nosh back when the place opened in the mid '90s, but the dishes literally missed their mark. "I found the bartenders were eating more food than I was selling," Bacon explains. Now there's fair-priced, elevated pub grub, from little bites like Italian tuna or Berkshire Blue cheese with fig jam (three for $7), to entrees like lobster-and-chorizo mac 'n' cheese ($16) or flank steak with house-made chimichurri ($14).

The culinary change seems even more impressive when you learn that there's no fire in the kitchen (and no ventilation to the street). Working wonders with a salamander and a convection oven is Patrick Davis, former banquet sous chef at the MFA. "It makes me be creative," Davis says from the bright side. "I was scared at first. I've never worked anywhere without flames, but it works." Bacon adds, "It's all about exceeding people's expectations." NICK ALTSCHULLER

HOT TOPIC!

DEAR CUTE BALD GUY THAT WORKS AT A WELL-KNOWN FIRM IN THE FINANCIAL DISTRICT: My friend and I were out for a little girls' night when we met you and your friend at Jurys. You seemed like a smart, funny, friendly guy, so chatting it up with you for a while was fun. When the topic of getting food came up, my friend and I were happy to grab apps there, or even go get a slice of pizza somewhere. You know, something casual. But at your insistence we went to Grill 23. Maybe things went awry when you dropped the "flaming homo" comment, and I called you out on it. But really?? To get up to use the "men's room" and leave—only a seasoned DB would do that. I guess I can see why a good-looking, seemingly nice guy is still single at your age. You aren't nice. Stay classy.

—The brunette one

In defense of the "Preppy Asian Girl on the L.A.-Philadelphia U.S. Airways Flight":

People pay extra for aisle seats now on an airline as they are more desirable. Even though she was alone she had every right to stay in her aisle seat and not be stuck in between two people in the middle. She isn't a mind reader so she doesn't know you are feeling sick or lost a close friend. As a travel agent I can tell you airlines want to increase revenue every way they can so advance seating is done online and there can be fees for better seats. Next time, get the seating you want in advance or suck it up and [don't] blame some innocent stranger for not moving out of her seat to accommodate you. By the way, did you ask the person in the aisle seat next to your husband if he/she would be willing to move to your middle seat? They probably wouldn't want to either, but they'd be just as guilty in your eyes of being [as] inconsiderate as Preppy Asian Girl.

Idiocy at the traffic department:

I had pulled over, with engine running, on Harrison Avenue in Boston to deal with a cell phone call. I didn't want to endanger myself, or others, by talking and driving simultaneously. There were about 10 or so metered spaces on the northbound side of the street just below the police station. Virtually all the spaces were unoccupied. The meter maid pounded on my car window and ordered me to leave immediately, telling me it was illegal for me to be there. (There were no signs indicating that stopping was prohibited!) I tried to explain that what she was telling me was senseless, dangerous and totally ridiculous. Not able to prevail, I left the safe place at which I had stopped and completed my conversation as I entered the turnpike entrance from Copley Square... quite convinced that the sanctimonious meter maid created numerous instances of driver inattentiveness.

GO FOR GOLD

With self-tanners, there's always a trade-off. You either wake up with a golden glow and a chemical stench, or you smell like a daisy and resemble a zebra. The quest for the best brand proves tricky, resulting in many streaky hands and ruined sheets. Do you go with the gel, lotion, foam or spray? Gradual or immediate results? Selecting the right color can be an issue in and of itself—and ideally the outcome should fall somewhere between Anne Hathaway and Donatella Versace. Let this chart be your guide. AMANDA KNORR

FERMENTED AND FABULOUS

Wine and its accoutrements make easy hostess gifts at cocktail parties this summer. Start with an acrylic rack, which looks cool and can travel from the floor to the fridge. Add some colorful, all-purpose glasses in crystal, not plastic (even cookouts should be civilized). Finish with a playful accessory: a stopper, a corkscrew or a thermometer. A bottle of bubbly never hurts either. KYLE WRIGHT

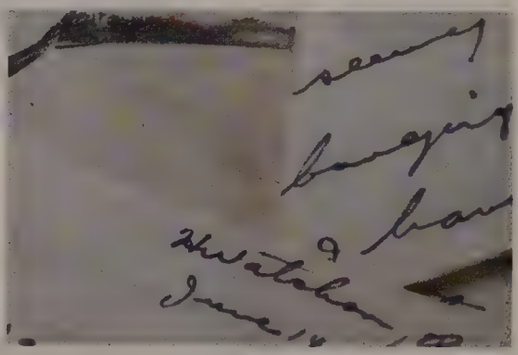
MY OLD MAN

A memoir of family and race

"HE SAW THE WORLD BOTH through literature and through bitter experience," author Danzy Senna's white mother said of her black father, Carl. In a blaze of '60s idealism and defiance, this dazzling couple married, producing three children.



Her mother's Howe family lineage—Quincy, Adams, the Mayflower—was embedded in the very cobblestones of Boston's intellectual and social history. Meanwhile, Carl's time in a Southern orphanage, his intermittently present mother and his absent father (allegedly a Mexican boxer) contrasted sharply. Politics, poetry and fiction brought these two adventurers together, but drink and abuse horribly sundered their connection, as well as dad's with Danzy. Decades after many wary-making disappointments from her father (and a macabre, half-droll outing where, at age 12, Carl dresses her up as his alleged "wife" in an attempt to get a free camera from a time-share company), Danzy delves into his past to understand his paternal shortcomings. Newly discovered relatives reveal sordid sprinklings, like the white priest who fathered Carl's sister.

Where Did You Sleep Last Night?
A Personal History by Danzy Senna

The author explores her roots to better understand her parents.

Then there's a church service exotically imbued with passionate speaking in tongues and fainting. Throughout, Danzy puzzles out biracialism, putting the exotic unknown in the context of the pain her father both experienced and delivered. And she forgives, a little. ***

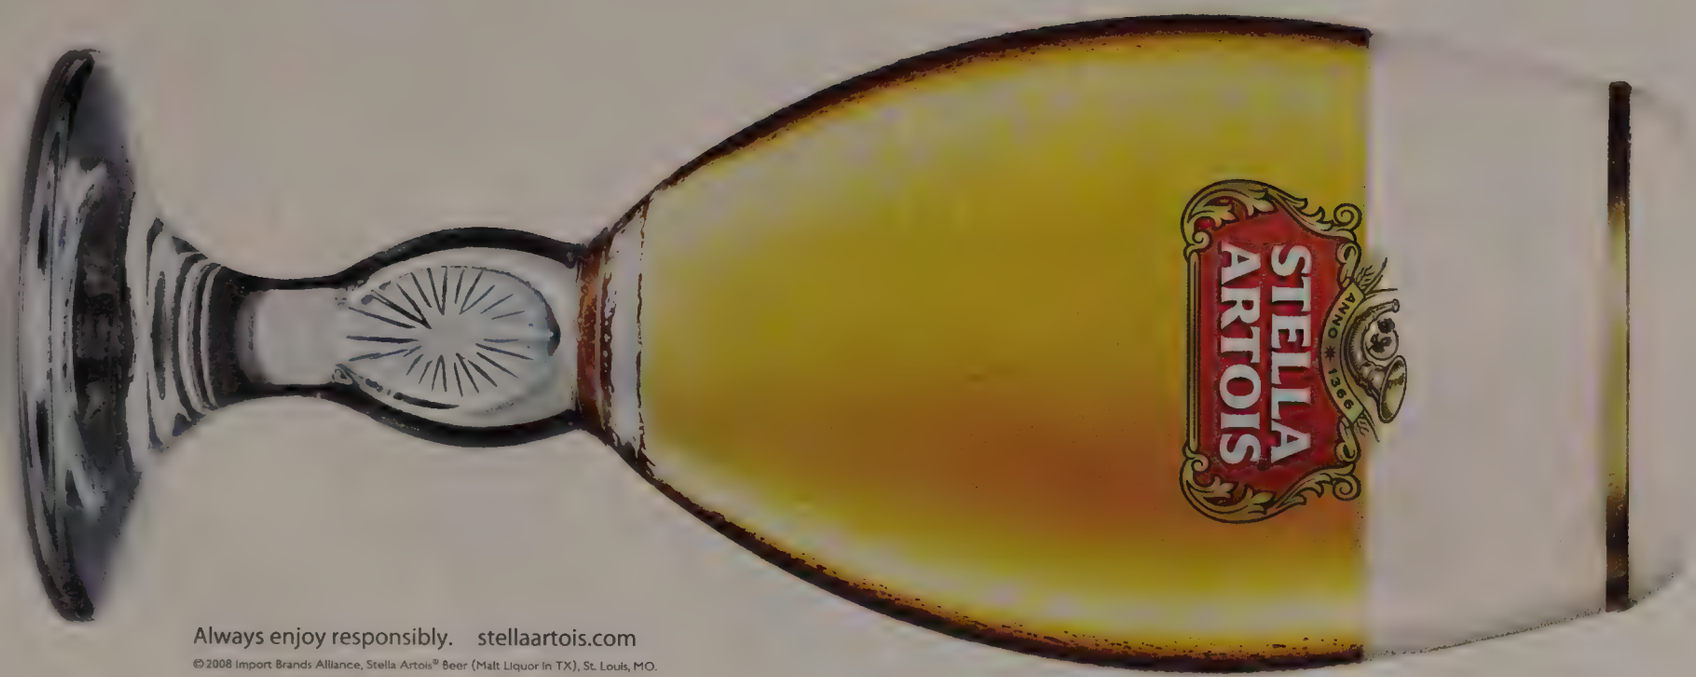
HUNGRY LIKE THE WOLOF

Savoring Senegal at Teranga

IN WOLOF, ONE OF Senegal's many ethnic languages, "teranga" means hospitality. At Marie-Claude Mendy's new Senegalese restaurant—Boston's first—the menu reflects the diversity of that western African nation's cultural influences, from French to Vietnamese to Arabic. Flavors run the gamut from exotically intriguing to comfortingly familiar. Thiebou djeun, Senegal's national dish, is a savory tomato-based fish stew with big chunks of vegetables and broken jasmine rice.

At the zebrawood bar, beer and wine are served, but this isn't a spot for cocktails. Because Senegal is 95 percent Islamic, the focus is on non-alcoholic juices flavored with orange flower water and vanilla sugar: Pick from rosy hibiscus, spicy ginger and lush, frothy "bouye." That's juice from the baobab tree, unavailable in Boston, so Mendy's mother "sends a big load of stuff every three months."



Poised at the intersection of Washington Street and Mass. Ave., Teranga extends the South End restaurant zone just a block past Toro. Prices are extremely reasonable, topping out at $17 for michoui—marinated, herb-stuffed, roasted lamb shank with caramelized onions and Moroccan couscous. Dinner is served seven days a week.

THE ECONOMY CONTINUES to take a toll on upscale fine-dining restaurants. Aujourd'hui in the Four Seasons Hotel is slated to shut its doors, to be repurposed as more profitable function space. And the already-lamented Great Bay in the Hotel Commonwealth has served its last oyster on the half shell.

ON A SWEETER NOTE, one of the best bargains of the summer is the Mouss-icle. Three bucks buys you the ultimate chill thrill: frozen mousse dipped in milk and dark chocolates, impaled on a handy stick, and served up at ChocoLee in the South End.

Perfection has its price.

Of course it tastes better than other beers. We've had over 600 years to get the recipe right. Our esteemed brewery has been producing beer in Leuven since 1366. Which means we've been around a bit longer than most. Mind you, over the years our beer has witnessed the odd change or two. For instance, our customers no longer drink it to ward off the Plague, as they used to in medieval times. However, one thing has stayed the same after all these years. Stella Artois is still painstakingly brewed in a time-honored tradition with the choicest ingredients. Which is why our customers have kept coming back for more, even after 600 years.

Always enjoy responsibly. stellaartois.com

TWICE IS NICE

YOU WOULD THINK THAT a restaurant location that has changed hands three times in eight years would indicate a star-crossed venue. On the contrary. Five Craigie Circle in Cambridge, where Krista Kranyak's Ten Tables is playing to full houses, was home to immediate predecessors with similarly strong followings—Tony Maws with Craigie Street Bistrot, before he moved to the larger, more ambitious Craigie on Main, and Christopher Bissell, who closed Butterfish to pursue an even higher calling: teaching.

Kranyak, whose Ten Tables in Jamaica Plain has outlasted formidable competition in that food-conscious quarter, has applied both her savvy and her instinct for attracting the attention of discriminating diners in the equally sophisticated, if somewhat more precious, Cambridge market. Here, the ambiance of the unlikely space in a homely apartment building may be an advantage. (Cantabrigians often cloak their patrician credentials in plebeian garb.) The decor is pleasant, though the lighting is somewhere between dusk and midnight. Brown butcher paper covers the tables and accentuates the bistro atmosphere, while white napkins and capacious wine glasses inject a note of elegance.

Consistent quality explains why enthusiastic patrons steadily filled every available seat on the two evenings I dined here, once midweek and once on a Sunday night. Two cod creations stood out among the appetizers. Salt cod beignets with romesco sauce ($9) consisted of three large, crisply fried spheres with the delicacy of fritters. The romesco sauce, a happy marriage of ground almonds, garlic, olive oil and roasted peppers, was both robust and refined. On a different night, the romesco accompanied a pleasantly fishy brandade of cod and potatoes, which I thought even better. Equally robust was the generous link of house-made sausage ($10), whose deft combination of herbs complemented the goodness of Berkshire pork. Served with a garnish of white cannellini beans, it satisfied like a mini-cassoulet. Lighter in body but with vivid flavor, the salmon rillette ($10), served with tender baby watercress and brioche toasts, achieved a refined simplicity.

WHERE HAVE YOU BEIGN ALL MY LIFE?
Salt cod beignets benefit from a robust romesco.

Main courses ranged from surf to barnyard. Broiled Moroccan swordfish ($24) evoked the sea in superlative fashion, its texture firm but moist, enhanced by garnishes of tender young spinach, delicious pine-nut puree and piquant, but not hot, pepper jam. Steak frites ($25), a bistro mandatory, brought a cut from the flap, a coarse, full-flavored section from the belly of the steer, here treated with a dry adobo marinade before being pan roasted. It arrived redder than my colleague had anticipated when he ordered it medium rare, revealing that Ten Tables evidently follows Continental conventions, whereby medium rare means red rather than pink. No harm that night, however, as the waiter whisked the steak back for another dose of heat that left my colleague fully satisfied.

The only disappointment I experienced, a dry Berkshire pork rib chop ($24), was not quite thick enough to achieve a good searing and leave the interior juicy. But this was compensated for by the pleasantly bitter turnip greens, impeccably textured Chantenay carrots and terrific, chewy spaetzle that accompanied it. The skillet-roasted chicken ($19), meanwhile, lived up to its pedigree. The Giannone bird from Quebec was succulent and flavorful. If you're ever faced with the task of selecting your final meal, have the warden send out to Ten Tables for this dish, especially if it comes with the same sides of red rice and faro, fava beans and asparagus sautéed in butter, and a delectable morel cream sauce.

Desserts (all $8) continued the triumphs: a light and refreshing pink grapefruit gratin with Muscat sabayon; coconut crème caramel, an imaginative variant of a bistro standard; and chocolate terrine, intensely chocolatey and enhanced by the herbal notes of Thai basil ice cream and sea salt. The wine list was a welcome surprise in light of the priciness I recalled from the list at Ten Tables in JP. First, carafes of serviceable house red (Rioja) and white (pinot grigio) cost only $26 a liter and $14 a half liter. Even better, a bottle of 2004 Irreverente ($28), a combination of four red grape varieties from the Beiras region of Portugal, proved luscious and structured with an appealing finish.

Despite the crush of patrons, Ten Tables' service was professional, attentive and never rushed. On our first visit, the waiter was initially a tad overbearing—well-meaning, but a little too assertive with his recommendations. When he saw that we knew what we were doing, he backed off, and from that moment through the end of our last visit, service was impeccable. It's easy for waiters to succeed when they're selling such a superior product. ×××

FLIGHT INATTENDANT

Confrontation and reconciliation in the air

I'M TYPING UP SOME notes on my laptop when I feel the plane begin to move back from the gate. As I save the file and prepare to stash my computer, I'm besieged. "What do you think you're doing?" barks a flight attendant. She's in quite a state of pique. "Didn't you hear my announcement to shut down electronic devices?" Truthfully, I didn't. And I tell her so. But I'm putting my computer away, so this transgression is behind us now, right? No, it's not. She looks like she might hit me, and I realize I have to change my tack. Because this isn't your average overzealous airline professional. I'm dealing with someone who's definitely on her own program.

"We're already having trouble, and this"—she jabs a finger at my malicious MacBook—"isn't helping." The insinuation that I'm to blame for whatever unspecified maladies are keeping us on the ground seems like a challenge. She's beckoning me to step across the line of rationality and into her world. And believe me, I'm tempted. I've already had a very long day, and on the second leg of a connection I would like nothing more than to go on a good tirade. Topic: Why my computer doesn't actually emit magical danger-rays that will cause the plane to become possessed by profound evil when we pull back from the gate. Supporting evidence: We're pulling back from the gate.

Instead, I lean in close, stare into the hellfires burning in her eyes and reiterate, "Sorry, I guess I didn't hear you," while simultaneously closing my computer. I can't stand when people go on power trips, but getting into it with a flight attendant is a losing proposition. She owns your ass for the next several hours and has the power to make your flight very unpleasant indeed. Air travel is such a desperate and demoralizing experience that the prospect of being withheld pretzels is enough to completely dictate my behavior. I'll enjoy my meager snack more than I would enjoy telling her to go get run over by a beverage cart. Satisfied that she has properly dropped the hammer on me, she stalks off to find new prey in the first-class cabin.

Don't push my buttons!

About an hour later, I glance up from my magazine to see that Fight Club is standing next to me again. I steel myself for another fusillade of abuse, but am taken off guard when she asks, "Are you a wine drinker?" Considering the source, this seemingly innocuous question is fraught with peril. Surely, someone put a bottle of wine in an overhead bin, and it leaked all over her new copy of Unicorn Enthusiast Quarterly, and now she wants to pin the crime on me, the Laptop Anarchist. I decide I'll go with a vague answer that can in no way be used against me. "Occasionally," I reply. She departs for the galley.

A moment later, she's back carrying a Styrofoam cup filled with wine. Gee, lady, what's your favorite '80s hair band? Could it be... Poison? No thanks. At the very least, she must've stirred me up a little sangria of shiraz and Ex-Lax. I have to know her motivation. As she hands me the cup of death, I ask, "So, what's the occasion?"

The occasion, apparently, is that I passed some sort of test that only she knew I was taking. The wine is my reward, for I ran the gauntlet of her rage without screaming back in her face. She doesn't outright apologize, but implies that hers is a brusque style that doesn't sit well with everyone.

She then launches into a spontaneous personal bio, painting herself as a compassionate yet no-nonsense individual, sort of an amalgamation of Rambo and Mother Teresa. As I sit there, still eying the wine suspiciously, she boasts of helping disadvantaged children and being a veteran of a war that seems impossibly long ago. I'm not sure what I'm supposed to do with this information, or how it relates to my question about the wine. I guess, in her estimation, the query, "Why did you give me this wine when you were mad at me?" can be summarily answered by, "I was in the Crimean War." I'm beginning to like this lady.

She's not done. Apropos of nothing, she tells me her age, which is about 15 to 20 years older than she looks. This is my cue to say, "You don't look that old at all!" Instead, I blurt, "Happy birthday!" which prompts her to explain that it's not actually her birthday. I guess I tend to whiff when people set themselves up for compliments. Our odd non-happy-birthday exchange completed, she departs and leaves me with my wine. Despite my initial misgivings, I take a healthy pull. Hey, you don't turn down free wine on a flight. I might be skeptical, but I'm not crazy. ✖✖✖

ON THE ROAD

Conspicuous consumption in Palm Beach

IF YOU CARE ABOUT TRENDS IN America, traveling around the country and asking questions is the best way to stay informed. This includes visiting the playgrounds of the rich (and the formerly rich). This spring I checked out Palm Beach to see if its slice of society is changing along with the rest of us. The best line I've ever heard about that gilded little island came from one of Boston's biggest real estate developers who wintered there. "In Boston," he told me, "I'm a rich, old man. In Palm Beach, I'm a poor, young one."

It does seem that the island is a refuge for the elderly, for the generation that grew up believing that being really tan was really important. And it's still important. "You have such great color," I said to an amazing woman at our hotel pool who wore the smallest bikini I'd ever seen west of St. Tropez. She also had a red rose tattooed on her left inner thigh—and must have been in her mid-80s. "I used to use baby oil and iodine when I was in high school to get that color," I told her.

"Sugar," she answered, "You shudda kept usin' it." Her voice sounded like she gargled with Jim Beam, and she walked by me on pink, three-inch mules, acting like I couldn't afford to buy a leash for her tiny King Charles spaniel.

A more confident town, Boston has a different vibe. Until recently, it was a city of old money. And it's still not a place that smiles on conspicuous consumption. "Palm Beach is a paradise of insecurity and envy," a longtime resident told me. "Indeed," he added, "Palm Beach, the East Side of Manhattan, East Hampton and Beverly Hills are the biggest beds of insecurity. You know why? In those places, it drives people crazy to be sitting in a restaurant and thinking, 'The guy at the next table has 10 million more than me.' Drives people nuts." He continued, "But the people-watching in these places of high anxiety is the best in America. Puts the Franklin Park Zoo to shame."

Peter Clark, an old friend of mine who ran a consulting firm in Pittsburgh and kept an apartment in Palm Beach, epitomized that sense of insecurity. Peter was a bachelor and had a favorite restaurant where he dined three nights a week. He'd bring gift-wrapped Ferragamo scarves for the bartender to hold. Then, when Peter showed up with a date, the bartender would present the package, "A small token of Peter's admiration," he'd say. It always got a "wow" response.

Peter also duked with the maître'd on a regular basis. "The maître'd is one of my best buddies in town," Peter would say. "He loves me." But Peter died suddenly. Three months later, my wife and I visited Palm Beach and went to "his" restaurant. "We're friends of Mr. Clark's," I said to the maître'd. "You know, he passed away." He expressed much sadness and took us to a table. Several hours later, as we were leaving, the maître'd said, "When you see him, give Mr. Clark my best." Talk about the insecure places in life.

The dining world is rife with them. I spoke with a waitress at a restaurant where several years ago you were considered lucky to get a reservation. Now it's half empty, and they're grateful to take you as a walk-in. "Business is terrible," she told me, "and the summer is coming where everything is usually dead." A room service waiter admitted further, "I'm exhausted. We're doing a lot of double shifts because of all the layoffs. One of our maître'ds drives the drinks wagon on the golf course two days a week. Cross training."

Indeed, American society adapts to new realities faster than any other in the world. And people from around the country have reported several trends to me. One is the belief that the wise-guy, conspicuous consumption model of the last 10 years or so is dead. Competition for the biggest house on the block is now deemed disgusting, and modesty in most things is increasingly in style.

Not so long ago, an architect friend who does a lot of Palm Beach work was being interviewed for a job at one of the great oceanfront homes on the island. An English butler asked him in heavy royal accent, "Will you have a bagel, sir?" My friend couldn't understand a word the butler said. "This spring," my friend continued, "the owner's wife came in to offer, 'I just made some blueberry muffins…'" The architect could understand every word. And the butler was nowhere to be seen.

This should make you think about changes in our country and how they'll affect you, not in the next few months, but over years to come. The bright side of tougher times is keeping our sense of humor intact. Eventually it helps us out of tough patches. One of my friends in Palm Beach told me the day my wife and I were leaving, "I'm not kidding. I took my car to a car wash last week in West Palm. There was a street person sitting on a sidewalk next to the wash holding up a sign. 'Will Work For Food,' it read. 'Smoked Salmon and Champagne.' I gave him a buck." ×××

4 Bold Red Sox Predictions

Trading Clay We spent the spring scratching our skull over Theo's refusal to rescue Clay Buchholz from the land of long bus rides and busted groupies. But now, finally, we understand why—because the Sox are going to trade him! Call Clay up now, and anything less than stellar pitching hurts his value, but when left to murder defenseless minor leaguers, he's a small market GM's wet dream.

In That Case, Better Swap Him for a Left Fielder Remember that feeling you got every time Big Baby made a clutch jumper against Orlando? The one that said, "Wow, that's great! But someone's definitely gonna overpay for him now." Welcome to every Jason Bay home run. This will be his last season in Boston.

Appearance Is Everything Ramón Ramírez is a horse. It's a funny image, but we're talking about the frequency with which Tito sends the fireballer out to the mound. He'll continue to do so, and Ramírez will break Mike Timlin's team record for appearances in a season with 82.

No Love for Lefty Despite the rumors, the Red Sox will NOT sign the recently released Tom Glavine. However, we do expect them to reach a deal with either Mark Wohlers or Charlie Leibrandt before rosters expand in September.

5 FUTURE BETS

Higher 2009 Total: Dice-K Wins vs. David Ortiz Homers What's sadder? That we don't think Dice-K will earn more than 12 wins this season, or that we're positive 12 will be enough to eclipse Papi's home run total? It has to be the latter. Watching Papi at the plate is excruciatingly uncomfortable, like putting on a wet bathing suit. Pick: Dice-K

When Will Vince Wilfork Report to Camp? Over/Under: Aug. 1 The Patriots have the reputation of being stone-cold negotiators unwilling to pay veterans what they're worth. But truth is, when those "special" players come along, Team Belichick is always willing to compromise. Expect to see big old No. 75 clogging up every hole, gap and toilet in Foxborough for many years to come. Pick: Under

More 2009 Carries: Laurence Maroney vs. Fred Taylor Yikes! This is like trying to predict the winner of a juggling contest between two blind guys. Can we take "the field"? OK, fine. Maroney and Taylor are both prime candidates for season-ending surgery, but in this case, we're betting on youth—especially since youth's career is essentially on the line. Pick: Maroney

Which Coach Will Last Longest in Boston: Claude Julien, Terry Francona, Bill Belichick or Doc Rivers? Forget Julien—hockey coaches have a shorter shelf life than unsealed bread—so that leaves three beloved champions. At gun point, we'll say Francona, but only because you'd have to commission Benjamin Gates (National Treasure, represent) to uncover the truth behind Belichick's contract. Pick: Francona

How Many Celtics Will Have Off-season Surgery? Over/Under: 3.5 Kevin Garnett (knee) and Tony Allen (ankle) have already gone under the knife—oh, stop your worrying, T.A. will be fine—but the question is, will at least two other Celtics' surgeries follow suit? Maybe Kendrick Perkins' shoulder? Or how about Paul Pierce's knee? Why the hell are we speculating about this? We'll shut up now. Pick: Under

1 ONE RIDICULOUS CAREER

If Tim Wakefield can knuckle his way to just 21 more victories, he'll be the Red Sox ALL-TIME leader in wins, starts and innings. Incredible, but it's not all puppy dogs and ice cream for Wake—he already holds the franchise marks for losses, hits walks and HBP.

2 PATRIOTS COMINGS AND GOINGS

Brady's Back But as nice as that is, we'll keep the Champale on ice until after No. 12 gets hit (and gets up) a couple times. Watching him tip-toe around invisible defenders just feels uncomfortable. Like sitting through a David Ortiz at-bat in a wet bathing suit.

Rodney Rides Off Rodney Harrison was the ultimate "love him if he's on your team, despise him if he's not" type of player, and for five seasons, the headhunter had our hearts. Now he's off to NBC, where we pray he still has one cheap shot left in the tank. (Tiki Barber's ass isn't going to kick itself.)

3 DATES TO WATCH

6/12 The Sox head to Philadelphia for a date with the Phillies. Keep your fingers crossed for a potentially classic showdown between Tim Wakefield and Jamie Moyer, brought to you by Jitterbug cell phones and the Council on Aging.

6/17 It's the one-year anniversary of the Celtics' title-clinching victory over the Lakers! So let's all take a moment and bask in the splendor of our glories.... We now return you to your regularly scheduled pool of regret and despair.

Soroff On LYDIA SHIRE

The master chef dishes on the joys of KFC, salt and a good knife.

CELEBRITY CHEF LYDIA SHIRE was born and raised in Brookline. Shire, 60, began her career as the "salad girl" at the venerable Maison Robert, eventually rising to head chef. She had stints at the Harvest, Café Plaza and Parker's before finally opening her own restaurant in 1982, the critically acclaimed Seasons at the Bostonian Hotel. In 1986, Shire launched the new Four Seasons Hotel in Beverly Hills, where she was the first female executive chef in the luxury chain's history. Three years later, she returned home to start the groundbreaking Biba, which earned her a James Beard award. In 1994, she opened Pignoli, and in 2001 took over one of the city's most storied eateries, Locke-Ober, becoming the female chef-owner of a restaurant that had banned women from its dining room for 97 years. In 2003, Shire reincarnated Biba with the now-defunct Excelsior, and more recently she opened Blue Sky in York Beach, Maine, and Scampo at the Liberty Hotel. She lives in Weston.

Jonathan Soroff: If the house is a body, then what organ is the kitchen?
Lydia Shire: The heart. Definitely. It's the engine.

Best seduction dish?
I'd have to say anything that has lots of fat. Fat coats your tongue, and it's the best feeling in the world going down your gullet.

What's your favorite meal that can be prepared in under 20 minutes?
Spaghetti aglio olio. And flank or skirt steak.

Ever use pre-packaged foods?
No. But that said, I do like Hungry Man Fried Chicken TV dinners. If it's just me, and I have tons of work to do, I've gone to the supermarket and gotten one. Or I've secretly gone to Kentucky Fried Chicken and eaten thighs until I feel sick. KFC is good food.

McDonald's or Burger King?
Oh, McDonald's. Not that I have anything against Burger King. I just never go there.

Name one thing everyone should know how to do in the kitchen?
I would say taste. Too many people don't try hard enough to taste what they're making. They should also learn to be bolder with seasoning.

Single favorite seasoning?
Salt. Food is inedible without salt. The other day, this man very proudly said, "I put no salt in anything," and I was just sort of holding onto my chair, thinking, "I hope you don't invite me to your house for dinner."

Pet peeve with restaurant patrons?
When they ask for a sauce on the side. To me, it means they don't trust us. I think I put sauce correctly on a plate. I don't flood it or pour things all over food. They should trust us.

Ever given anyone food poisoning?
No. Absolutely not. I've never gotten it, either. But I will say that there are foods that just don't agree with people. I can't eat tuna fish sandwiches anymore. It's the combination of the tuna, which is sort of rich, and mayonnaise, which I love. It just doesn't sit well with me. Milk, either, but I refuse to give that up.

One secret people should know when they go into the supermarket?
I'm not shy about poking my finger into things and smelling it.

Favorite thing to eat?
I'm a carnivore. A really great piece of beef, with lots of butter melted over it.

Anything you don't cook well?
I'm pretty accomplished as a baker, so there's nothing in the pastry world that I won't tackle. I'm a very good butcher. But there are techniques I don't know much about. I couldn't walk into Fernan Adria's El Bulli on the Costa Brava and make his foam things and all that.

Most underrated restaurant in the city?
Well, I wish Locke-Ober was located in a different part of Boston so people would visit us more often. We're in the worst location. The food is just as good as at Scampo and Blue Sky. I have equally talented chefs. But our location is a real problem. As for other restaurants, it hurts me in my heart when anybody bad-mouths Todd English. He is one of the best chefs we've ever seen. He can do no wrong.

What do you think of nutritionists saying, "Eat this. Don't eat that."
I'm kind of sick to death of the food police and these emaciated anorexics telling people what to eat. I worry about what mothers are giving their kids: a carrot stick instead of a cookie? I mean, aren't they kids, and can't they have a cookie in the middle of the day to have a little pick-me-up, a little bit of sugar? I just think it's weird. Curtailing butter...

What's your favorite snack at Fenway?
Hot dogs! I love hot dogs.

Three things everyone should have in the fridge?
Good mustard. Butter. Milk. Oh, and Hellman's Mayonnaise. The full-throttle one, not the light version.

Single most important tool?
Obviously, a good knife. And a good knife sharpener. I have the greatest one. It's called the Chantry. I've turned everyone onto it. Wolfgang [Puck] got them for all his chefs.

Single most important thing to remember when throwing a dinner party?
I think your table should be spectacular. And obviously the food should be over the top. When I had Julia Child over, I had a turbot flown in from France and fresh porcini mushrooms, and I made a pressed duck. It should be hard. Everything good in life doesn't come easily, right?

Rarest delicacy you ever ate?
In China, I had raccoon. I had reindeer antlers, crickets. I ordered dog, but they were out of it.

Grossest thing you ever ate?
No food is gross to me. But I do hate rodents.

Ever tried guinea pig?
Yes. In Colombia.

That's a rodent.
[Screams.] Don't tell me that!

Is there a silver bullet in the kitchen?
Well, I think there are times when cream gets a bad rep, and it can be beautiful in things.

If you could only eat two cuisines for the rest of your life, what would they be?
Chinese and French. I think they're the two greatest cuisines in the world, when you consider the techniques they figured out.

If you were on death row, what would you request for a last meal?
A steak, with lots of butter on it. And salt.

One person you'd love to cook for?
Alice Waters. I've cooked with her but not for her. But last week, in one week, I cooked for two people who are gods to me: Colman Andrews and Ruth Reichl. ×××

Stepping Up to the Plate

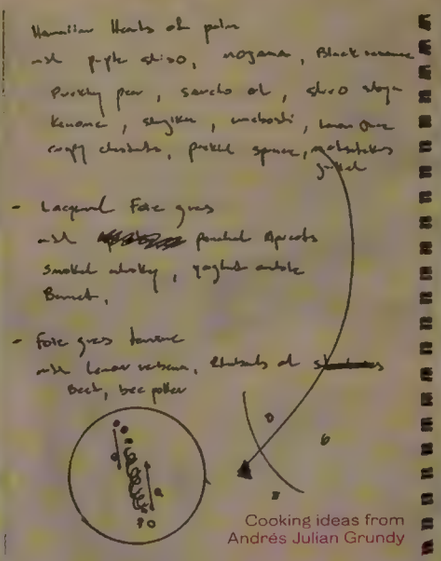
Boston's next generation of chefs looks to a wider audience.

By Linh Tran Brincat

Cassie Kyriakides Piuma

IT'S 10 AM, SEVEN AND A HALF HOURS before Cambridge's famed restaurant Oleana opens, and chef de cuisine Cassie Kyriakides Piuma is already in the kitchen. Dressed in cutoff sweats and striped pastel socks, and shuffling around in oversized clogs, Kyriakides Piuma looks more like a whimsical children's book heroine than a culinary rising star. It's easy to underestimate her, not just because she's prone to haphazardly sticking pens in her curly, blonde hair ("I collect pens," she laughs. "At the end of the day, 50 of them usually come out."), but also because she speaks with the self-deprecation and wide-eyed innocence of someone with a lot yet to learn.

"I'm inspired by anything and everything around me," she says, gesturing broadly with her hands. "I'll have a good Spanish meal at Toro and spend months of focus on it."



It's a sign of Kyriakides Piuma's skill that Toro chef Jamie Bissonnette returns the compliment, expressing great respect for her cooking. "She's proved that she is fantastic, consistent," Bissonnette says. "Going into Oleana, there's always a spice or an ingredient that I've never had or never heard of. It's just remarkable."

And he's not her only fan. "Cassie is such a talented cook," Will Gilson, chef at Garden at the Cellar and a former coworker, enthuses. "She would work, go home, fall asleep reading cookbooks, come in with a list of experiments and execute each perfectly. And the few she didn't, she'd put away and find better ways to make them." With her work ethic and gift for experimentation, Kyriakides Piuma is part of a generation of local chefs on the cusp of transcending the kitchen and entering the consciousness of foodies. But more so than the chefs that have come before, these future stars are committed to democratizing the experience of fine dining by using their considerable talents to make food that's challenging yet accessible to a wider audience.

Boston wasn't always a hotbed of restaurant talent. While Cambridge resident Julia Child began weaning Americans off safe, processed foods in the 1960s with her influential shows and cookbooks, the original celebrity chef never fronted a professional kitchen. In the 1980s, Lydia Shire, Jasper White and Frank McClelland put Boston on the culinary map by reinterpreting New England cuisine through the refined lens of classical techniques. Their successful restaurants in turn drew a new generation of ambitious cooks with well-stamped passports that included Jody Adams, Todd English, Barbara Lynch and Gordon Hamersley. In the 1990s and 2000s, Bostonians no longer needed to go to a fancy steakhouse to celebrate milestones. They went to Adams' Rialto in Cambridge, Todd English's Olives in Charlestown, Lynch's No. 9 Park in Beacon Hill and Hamersley's Bistro in the South End. And each time diners made trips to these neighborhoods, they saw more fine dining establishments adorn the landscape, vying for their patronage. Rising star Louis DiBiccari, chef de cuisine at Sel de la Terre on Boylston Street, trained with McClelland and is mindful of this history. "I look at people like Lydia and Frank and Gordon Hamersley and Jasper White, and I feel like they're the pioneers that really paved the road for us," he says. "They kickstarted it. Boston was a no-food town until these guys came along, and they just had a baby boom of restaurants."

What might have begun as a minor boom has become a major detonation. DiBiccari still marvels at the city's turnaround: "So many of the chefs that learned under Todd English, Gordon Hamersley, Lydia, Jody Adams and Frank are now really starting to blossom and show themselves. And now they've been turning tricks long enough that some of their sous chefs are starting to go off and open up restaurants. It's been phenomenal." But with the proliferation of ambitious, white-aproned cooks comes stiffer competition. While the rising sous chefs and chefs de cuisine may not be as famous as their mentors yet, their reputations are growing among their peers. All of them are young, ranging in age from 26 to 34, and as DiBiccari notes, all of them have sterling culinary pedigrees. Aside from Kyriakides Piuma, who works with Oleana's Ana Sortun, some of the most talented include: Bina Osteria's Leo Asaro, who trained with Michael Schlow at Radius and Via Matta; Sensing's Gérard Barbin, who is negotiating his own style as he tries to carry out three-star Michelin-chef Guy Martin's vision; KO Prime's Josh Buehler, who helped Bissonnette open Eastern Standard; O Ya's Tiffani Faison, who got her start cooking at English's Bonfire and is honing her craft under Tim Cushman; Clio's Andrés Julian Grundy, whose mastery of traditional techniques and molecular gastronomy helped Ken Oringer win an episode of Iron Chef last year; L'Espalier's James Hackney, who rose through the ranks of McClelland's landmark restaurant; and Barbara Lynch Gruppo's Colin Lynch (no relation), the executive chef for her dining empire.
